SIR WILLIAM CHRISTOPHER MACDONALD, GREATEST FRIEND OF CANADIAN EDUCATION, PASSES TO REST

Was Chancellor of McGill and the Greatest Benefactor of the University - Gifts Reached Over Ten Million Dollars - Interest in the Student Body Shown by the Erection of the McGill Union

In his plain-fronted residence in Prince of Wales Terrace, Sherbrooke Street West, which few would have suspected to have been the home of the possessor of so many millions, Sir William Christopher Macdonald, Chancellor of McGill University, merchant prince, and the greatest friend that Canadian education has ever known, passed quietly away on Saturday, June 9th. Sir William had been in failing health for a period of three years, and had been confined to his bed for six months previous to his death. When first taken ill, it was his custom to take daily drives in the neighborhood of the University, but latterly he had been unable to do so. He was in his eighty-sixth year at the time of his death.

The late Sir William Macdonald came of good Gaelic stock, for his grandfather, Capt. John Macdonald, was to eighth chief of the Clan Macdonald of Glenaladale, and among his ancestors were men who led the Macdonalds at Culloden and other fields famous in Scottish story. After founding the Scottish settlements at Tracadie, Scotch Fort, Glen Fennin and Ft. Augustus in Prince Edward Island, he grandfather served during the American revolutionary war in the 34th Royal Highland Emigrant Regiment.

Sir William started life, the youngest son of the Hon. Donald Macdonald, who was at one time president of the Legislative Council of Prince Edward Island. His mother's name was Anna Matilda Brecken. He was born at the family residence, Glenaladale, P.E.I., in 1831, and was educated at the Central Academy, Charlottetown. His business training was obtained at the island hospital, under the Hon. Daniel Broun, so that when he arrived in Montreal at the age of twenty-one he came well equipped as any young man of his time for the mercantile pursuits to which he applied himself with unflinching industry. He began as an importer and general commission agent, but it was into tobacco that his business specially developed. Commencing in a small way, the business established by Sir William has grown until it has assumed very large proportions. Yet throughout Sir William conducted it in the most simple manner possible. His factories were conducted in a strict style of business economy which did not endear him to labor unions, for whose theory he had little use. His down town office in Montreal for many years consisted of a couple of bare apartments with no prospect about them to indicate business prosperity. There was not the slightest trace of luxury or extravagance, which was Sir William's bugbear, nor of anything to indicate the philanthropist who engineered a revolution in educational methods and spent millions in doing it.

Sir William was up to his final illness still in business. He never abandoned his goods, and pursued the most conservative methods for many years, not even having a telephone in his factory or in his house. Anyone seeking imported tobacco from him had to call in with the order and accept it on credit for the import duty, and under no circumstances did he allow credit to extend over the end of the month. His only concession allowed being that he would not pay might cancel orders. Yet such was his reputation that he did an enormous wholesale business in chewing and smoking tobacco, and it was out of this business that he made his immense fortune.

A peculiar thing was that Sir William not only hated the smoking habit, but positively loathed tobacco chewing, and did his best to discourage the use of tobacco in all with whom he came in contact. It is related of him that when he was visiting New Brunswick at one time with Dr. J. Robertson, a waiter who helped Sir William on with his coat, wishing to gratify himself with the famous tobacco, remarked that he had smoked tobacco of Sir William's manufacture for fifteen years. "A most disgusting habit," snapped Sir William, turning on his heel.

Generous to a Degree.

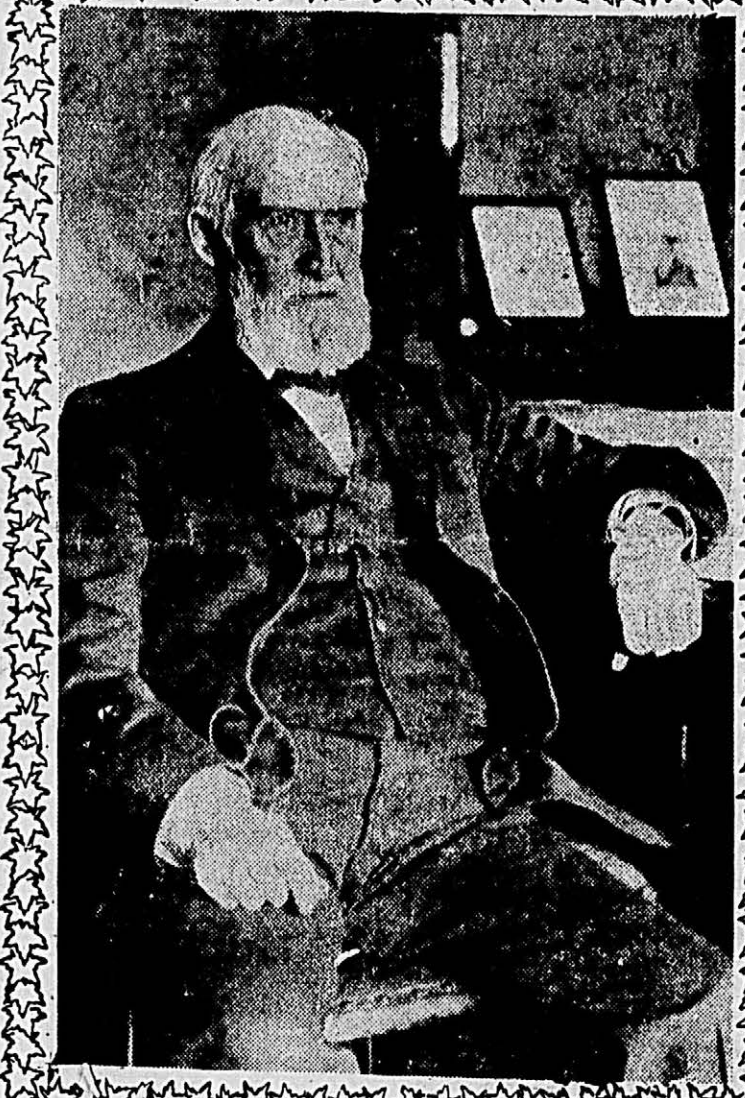

Sir William had the reputation of being a strict but just employer, and any incidents could be related that would prove him to have been generous as well as just. Take, for example, the case of a workman who was taken suddenly with disease and on the hand of death fell swiftly. The bereaved widow and family were in utter destitution, without money enough to pay for the funeral. Committees of workmen were organized and collected sufficient to relieve immediate wants. On going to the house of mourning, they found Sir William had forestalled them. The family had been already provided for. Other instances could be cited.

tion of the present building for chemistry, mining and metallurgy. This chemistry building was built on the most generous plan, the mining and metallurgical laboratories alone having a floor space of 10,000 square feet. The Governor-General and Lady Minto were present at the opening ceremony, in 1898, and the ceremony was further marked by the conferment by the Queen, through Lord Minto, of the dignity of knighthood on the generous donor. This was felt throughout Canada to be a mark of the interest of the Mother Country in the University, as well as a fitting acknowledgment of Sir William Macdonald's great liberality in the cause of education.

Lord Minto's Appreciation.

At this time, Lord Minto spoke as follows: "I feel that I am not at all equal to the task of expressing to Mr. Macdonald the appreciative grati-

THE LATE SIR WILLIAM C. MACDONALD

—By Courtesy of the Star.

It was about forty years ago that a meeting of the friends of McGill was being held in the Fraser Institute to see what could be done towards attending to the University's need for funds. Dr. S. E. Dawson, afterwards King's Printer at Ottawa, was chairman. Away in a back seat, looking as if his greatest desire in life was to escape observation, sat Mr. William C. Macdonald. Although less wealthy than at the time of his death, he was then reported to be enormously rich. Before the close of the meeting, Mr. S. E. Dawson left the chair and stepping over to the side of Dr. Dawson, the principal of McGill, and afterwards Sir William Dawson, said: "Dr. Dawson, do you see that gentleman sitting on one of the back benches near the door?" "Yes," replied the principal, "who is he?" "That," said the publisher, "is Mr. William Macdonald, the wealthy tobaccoist. If you could only interest him in the University there is no telling what he might do for it." Acting upon this hint the man of education asked to be introduced to the man of wealth. Dr. Dawson appealed with such effect to Mr. Macdonald, that the heart of the millionaire warmed and his purse opened. There soon came a cheque for $30,000. That was how the munificent series of gifts from McGill's greatest benefactor began.

The cheque for $30,000 was followed by many others for larger and smaller donations. Long before Sir William Peterson came to McGill as principal, Sir William, then plain Mr. Macdonald, had done a lion's share in building up the university, notably in building and equipping the magnificent engineering and physics buildings and establishing endowment funds for the same. In the very report that records the coming of Sir William Peterson is to be found the name of Sir William Macdonald, as the donor of the observatory site, besides various large sums of money for diverse purposes. In 1896 his name again figured large in the list of donations, his chief gifts to the university in that year being $150,000 for the maintenance of the engineering and physics buildings, and $475,000 for the erectude of the University or the honest admiration of his country for his large hearted munificence (Applause). Mr. Macdonald has devoted a large fortune to McGill, a university which commenced as a provincial institution, and has now through the excellence of its organization risen to a national institution. He has devoted this fortune to the public benefit with a rare modesty and with no desire for reward. (Applause). He did not seek for fame; his only idea and the only reward which he thought it possible to look forward to was the pleasure of witnessing the success of the institution which he thought could do so much good to his country. I congratulate you on possessing such a citizen as Mr. Macdonald, and I feel sure that unambitious as he himself is for public honor, all his fellow countrymen will welcome the recognition of his very great public services. (Cheers). The Queen has been pleased to confer upon Mr. Macdonald the honor of knighthood. (Renewed cheering). I feel sure that Canada will welcome this as an honor bestowed upon Canada itself. Not only Mr. Macdonald's fellow-citizens, but the nation of Canada as a whole will be proud of it, and I hope he will allow me, as the representative of the Queen, to be the first to congratulate him upon receiving it. Mr. Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, has also asked me to convey to Mr. Macdonald his congratulations, and his great appreciation of Mr. Macdonald's benevolent gifts to this great University. I now declare the new building open, and I am sure that all present will join with me in the wish that Mr. Macdonald may live long to see the success of the institution to which he has so nobly contributed." (Applause).

One of Sir William's most useful donations to the University was that of the Joseph property on Sherbrooke street, adjoining the University grounds, which had been purchased by speculators with a view to the erection of an hotel. At that time (1899) the University was financially embarrassed and unable of itself to make a purchase of the property. As had been the case so often before, Sir William came to the rescue, and after purchasing the property for a sum in the neighborhood of $125,000, presented it to the University.

The Board of Governors, upon the receipt of this gift, put itself on record as follows, in part:—

"The board further resolves to place on record an expression of its deep indebtedness to Sir William Macdonald for supplying the money needed at a time when the University itself was without funds to effect the purchase. In this act of munificence, his colleagues on the board find fresh evidence of Sir William's constant care for the interests of a University for which he has already done so much, and also of his faith in the future which lies before McGill as the most representative institution of the English-speaking minority in the city and province.

"In the opinion of the board, nothing Sir William has ever done will so endear him to the friends of the University, including every graduate, as his prompt and successful opposition to a movement which, however unobjectionable in itself, could not have been carried out on the lines proposed without the gravest prejudice to the best interests of McGill University."

A Friend of the Students.

The student body always found a firm friend in Sir William. This was evidenced in no uncertain manner by the erection and furnishing of the Students' Union by him at a cost of approximately $219,119. This was after the erection of such a building had been proposed and a canvass among the graduates had been commenced. The funds raised from among the graduates were converted into an endowment when Sir William volunteered to bear the entire expense of erecting and equipping the building, which at that time was the only one of its kind in Canada, and which has been the clubhouse of thousands of McGill men since its erection in 1907. Although he was rarely seen by members of the student body except at convocation, it was the late Sir William's practice, before the infirmities of old age rendered it an impossibility, to take frequent walks through the grounds, about which were reared on every side monuments to his generosity. Especially was it his delight to walk into the Union unexpectedly, watch the students at billiards and enquire into the success of the operations of the building. He always displayed the keenest interest in the welfare of the students and of their place of recreation, and it is recorded that he expressed great pleasure when he remarked any small improvement in the building or its surroundings, such as the placing of turf in the rear of the Union. His visits to the Union were made regularly once a month.

How vast were his donations to McGill it would be hard to say. Never was there a fund raised in support of the University to which he was not a contributor, many times anonymously. The recorded gifts to McGill reach a value of well over $10,000,000; but there were many smaller ones which have gone unrecorded. A list follows:—

"CARRY ON" SAYS SIR WILLIAM PETERSON AT COMMENCEMENT OF FOURTH WAR SESSION

INAUGURAL ADDRESS.
Principal Peterson will deliver the Inaugural Address at 5.00 o'clock this afternoon in the Royal Victoria College.

Y.M.C.A. LOSES SERVICES OF FORMER SEC'Y

Students' Great Friend Called to Bigger Work

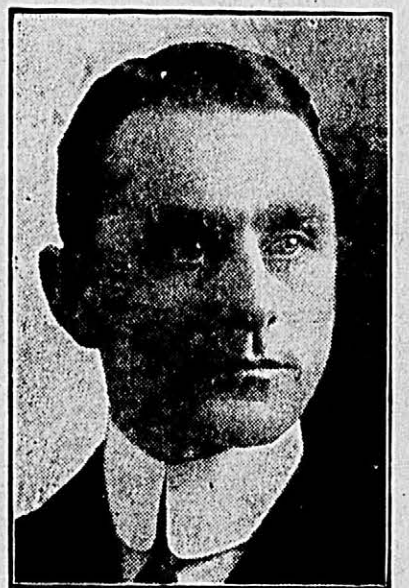

OVERSEAS WITH Y. M. C. A.

Rev. Donald McLeod Succeeds as General Secretary of McGill Y. M. C. A.

What the Board of Directors of the McGill Y.M.C.A. was afraid was going to happen soon, in connection with E. A. Corbett, M.A., took place sooner than expected. "Ed." is now in England, and will soon be somewhere in France doing his bit as Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

E. A. Corbett had been trying to get over since the beginning of the war. The chief difficulty in the way was the three year contract which he had signed up with the McGill Y.M.C.A. in 1913-1916. When the contract expired in September, 1916, "Ed." announced definitely that he was going across. The Board of Directors, however, prevailed on him to stay at least another year. The "Y" could not spare Corbett last year. Furthermore, this prominent students' friend had been appointed National Secretary for all Canada, and these two duties combined together convinced "Ed." to stay another year, and it was a record year in Corbett's life. Those of the students who had an opportunity to know Mr. Corbett closely can realize what it means to lose "Ed."

His is a splendid record. He got his B.A. in 1909, and graduated with honors from Theology in 1912, being the valedictorian of his year. After graduation he accepted a charge in the West, in which he succeeded so well that in three months the mission field he undertook became self-supporting. He was called back to the "Y" in 1913, and has since acted as General Secretary, assisted by Frank B. Compton in 1913-14, Howard Nichols in 1914-15, and K. P. Tsolainos in 1915-17.

Corbett justified the high hopes placed in him at the time of his appointment. His one aim was to be a help to the young men at the University, and no one enjoyed their trust and confidence more than he. All the departments of the "Y" were at their best under him. What he left as a lasting monument of work and success, however, above all his other accomplishments is the McGill Y. M. C. A. Branch he established in Boulogne, France. When the No. 3 McGill Hospital, under Col. Birkett, C.B., left Montreal in May, 1915, for the front, a number of McGill men, members of the "Y" were ready to go with the unit and assist their fellow students as voluntary "Y" workers. So great has been the success which crowned the efforts of Corbett and his associates that the McGill Field Branch Y.M.C.A. in Boulogne was pronounced by the National British Secretary as the best "Y" at the front.

Mr. Corbett did not know definitely when he left for England with what special "Y" branch he was to be employed. But he hoped that he will at least pay a short visit to our Field Branch in Boulogne, and witness personally the great work which he was instrumental in starting in 1915.

McGill Y.M.C.A. has lost a big man. It has the satisfaction of knowing, however, that he has gone to do a still larger work at the front. But before "Ed." left he made sure to leave his work in safe hands. Mr. Donald MacLeod was recommended by him as his successor, and the selection has once more justified Cor-

"Let us Devote Ourselves to Work and Study, but Bearing Always in Our Hearts the Splendid Fellows who are Fighting Our Battles," He Says.

"I am sure I may say that the session which opens to-day is likely to be a memorable one," said Sir William Peterson to McGill Daily Saturday. "The enemy is beginning to show signs of weakening, and if the end is not yet at hand, our fighting men are certainly making great strides towards the desired goal. Within a year from now we ought to be celebrating a victorious peace. Meanwhile, let us 'carry on' at McGill, devoting ourselves to work and study, but bearing always in our hearts the splendid fellows who are fighting our battles for us and for Canada and for the world."

"I cordially welcome all students who are entering the Faculty of Arts this Session, and also those who are resuming their courses in Arts," said Dr. Charles E. Moyses, Dean of the Faculty of Arts. "They will, I am confident, be true to the best traditions of the University. In a war in which every young man who can possibly do so, ought to serve, they will, I am sure, strive to do their part in maintaining the splendid record of McGill, both in honour of her dead and as an inspiration to those of her sons who are nobly fighting on in the most sacred of all her causes—the upholding of the liberty of peoples."

"The opening of this Session finds us at the beginning of the fourth year of the Great War," said Dr. Adams, Dean of the Faculty of Science. "Eleven million persons have already laid down their lives in the heroic struggle. The result of this conflict will determine whether freedom and all that free peoples hold most dear shall remain upon the earth—or it will depend the course of development of human society for decades, if not for centuries."

"McGill men have played their part nobly on the field of battle. Those of us who remain at the University must face the situation this year with a determination to do our duty here at home, by hard work and harder thinking, in preparation for the future, whether it be of continued war or if, it may be, a yet more searching peace."

"You ask me for a foreword to the coming session," said R. W. Lee, M.A., Dean of the Faculty of Law. "To-day there is but one foreword to the activities of every good Canadian. It is 'Win the War.' Until that is done, it is vain for me to speak of the great future which I confidently anticipate for the Dominion, for the University, and (may I add?) for my own Faculty."

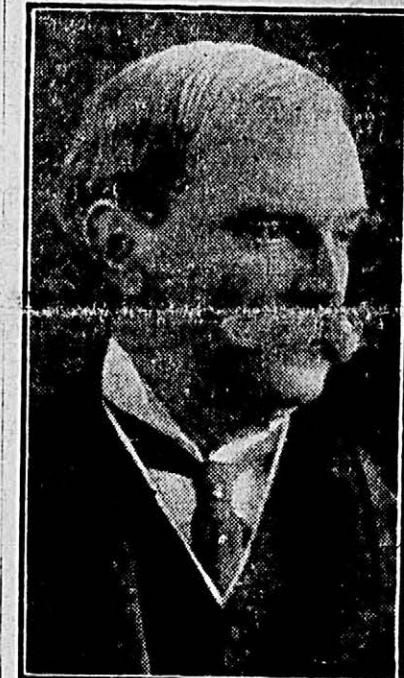

"In the Faculty of Medicine," said Dr. A. D. Blackader, Acting Dean, "work in the various departments will commence on Tuesday, without any formal opening. From present appearances the number of students will show a slight increase on that of the past two years. There is little change to be noted in the teaching staff. Several members of the junior staff have been called by the Government to take up special examining work, but the Faculty will use every legitimate means to ensure as little disturbance as possible in the already heavily taxed corps of clinical teachers. In the junior years no changes of importance have been made in the curriculum. In the fourth year most of the didactic lectures in medicine and surgery will be replaced by clinical lectures in the hospital. The number of didactic lectures on therapeutics are to be lessened—and in the third year are to be replaced by clinical lectures. The students of the fifth year have been working in the hospitals for the past six weeks. It is intended that teaching for them will cease about the end of March. And the successful ones be graduated in the beginning of April, in time to take up military work and cross in early spring.

"During the past summer the Montreal College of Pharmacy has been absorbed into the Faculty of Medicine. Mr. Moore, the former Dean of the College, will take charge of the teaching of Materia Medica and Pharmacology, while Chemistry and Botany will be systematically taught under the direction of the Professor of these important subjects. It is hoped that under the direction of a Committee of the Faculty, pharmaceutical students will receive such a practical and comprehensive training, as will insure to all our licentiates in Pharmacy a standing second to none."

Up to the moment of going to press the total registration figures in the various faculties were as given below.

low. No official statement could be obtained from the College authorities regarding exemption of students from conscription. It is, however, probable that the students of III, IV, and V years of the Faculty of Medicine will not be conscripted for overseas service at least until graduation. It is just possible that arrangements may be made whereby students of the second year of the same faculty may receive exemption.

bet's unique talent of getting the right men to do the right work.

Donald MacLeod comes from Ripley, Ontario. He took a four year course in Arts in McGill, and entered the Presbyterian College in 1912, graduating in 1915. During the last five years of his course, and since graduation "Don" has been pastor of the Rosemount Presbyterian Church. MacLeod is well known among the students, and numbers a host of friends in McGill. He has already proved the man Corbett recommended him to be, and the "Y" considers itself fortunate in being able to secure him.

Owing to the marked decrease in the attendance at McGill this year as well as the increased expense of keeping up the regular plus the war-time activities of the association, it has been found necessary to combine the duties of the General and Associate Secretaries in the person of the one secretary. The President of the Association, however, E. M. Busby, M.D. '13, and the Treasurer, K. P. Tsolainos Arts '18, are residents in the Hall and have undertaken along with the other resident members of the Board to devote all their spare time to help "Don" in the work.

The "Daily" takes this opportunity to express its best wishes to the new secretary, and to assure him of its hearty co-operation in the great work which the Association is doing in the University.

NINETY-SIXTH SESSION.

For well-nigh a century this city and this season have seen the gathering together of young men for the purpose of study and training. McGill's halls and campus have witnessed ninety-five sessions, and this week makes another term's work under way. In the past the academic year has always had its excitement, its thrills and to some extent its problems. Each year has held for its own particular generation of students, something of the zest and spirit of college life. But for the most part, these things have been individual. The University as a whole, as a corporate body, has seldom, if ever, experienced the same deep and stirring emotions that have moved her to such heroic efforts as the last three years have brought forth; and never has our Alma Mater opened her halls of learning to such a serious and thoughtful body of undergraduates. It is well that such is the case, and we would not have it otherwise.

The first year of the Great War saw McGill much disturbed, but not at all perplexed. With the courage of their convictions strong within them, our leaders among the students and on the staff emphasized the duty of the student to his country, as well as to his Alma Mater, and demonstrating their exhortations by the manly quality of their own deeds, they have gone forward into a sphere of activity far removed from their customary occupations. For those left behind the picture of our professors as leaders in the profession of arms, requires no small power of imagination. Nevertheless, it is actual, and we are justly proud of those who have gone. The second year of the conflict saw much less excitement in University circles, and probably much more accomplished in real work and sacrifice. Our college had found her place in the world struggle, and although the ordinary course of study was not seriously interrupted, much greater stress was put on the military side of the student's work. It is probable, however, that during the last year, McGill, in common with all Canada, has learned in a fuller and sadder way, the meaning of self-sacrifice which our part in the war has involved. When the sons of old McGill go forth surrounded by the glare and glamour of a great adventure, the sensation is not at all to be compared with that which we feel when they return to us maimed and broken. Or it may be that the manly spirit who went so proudly to his duty has gone so nobly to his death. Losses such as have been ours cannot help but sober the mass as well as the individual. Therefore, it is to a University, made serious by reflection and saddened by a sense of unreality, that we return this Fall.

Those who come for the first time will have formed conceptions of college life which will be entirely lacking in their actual experience. Yet disappointment must not be allowed the smallest place in the college man's feelings. If there is an evident lack, if college does not meet all one's expectations, we must labour all the more diligently, that the vacancies left by the boys overseas may not be too greatly felt. We must strive to fill one definite vacant place. If we cannot aid in the destruction of Prussian Militarism we can at least help in the construction of a better and stronger Canada; and the best way of helping our country is by being the best student or the best teacher that is possible in the given circumstances. College activities may be at low ebb, but that is all the more reason for real men and great efforts. None of us can afford to be known as "knockers." We must find our niche just as has our University. We must double and triple our efforts that the evident deficiencies be not too apparent. In service we will find our reward. The two are reciprocal. Let us each one determine that our share of the responsibility will be shouldered not as a burden or a sacrifice, but as our greatest privilege, and as a contribution to the cause for which the Allies are fighting.

Not in a spirit of pessimism or doubt, but as men prompted by high ideals and noble aspirations, we will endeavour to make this year a banner one. Every student is a factor and every service a help. We have a part to play, and if for the time being we must remain students, it is as students of McGill University that we can and will "play the game."

McGILL'S WAR WORK.

McGill is entering upon her fourth war term, and it is not yet certain that it will prove the last. In looking back over the period since the outbreak of the conflict, we may all feel proud of the record of our college. Over two thousand members of the staff, graduates, past students and undergraduates have enlisted under the voluntary system, and we can rest assured that wherever the Military Service Act may have been necessary to show men their duty to the country, it was not so necessary at McGill. The McGill Hospital has been more than once mentioned by persons in high authority as "the best hospital unit in France." Two batteries of siege artillery, composed largely of McGill men and their friends, and officered as far as possible by professors or graduates of McGill, have gone overseas; one is making a name for itself even now at the front, the other is undergoing training in England, which will make it ready to be equally effective. The Royal Flying Corps and Royal Naval Air Service count many McGill men among their most daring and successful pilots, and many more are training for service in the air.

And what of us who remain here? Are we, because physical inability to serve or other cogent reasons, prevent us from doing our duty to the Motherland in the way in which we should all prefer to do it—are we to count ourselves "out of it." Surely the answer must be "No." We must ever strive to show that we are as much bound up in this war as anyone.

How can we do our share, then, that we may not incur the charge of being like warm in our patriotism? At first it is a little hard to see what there is to be done by a man who has been rejected, let us say, for some physical defect. One can, of course, always explain that one is obtaining an education which will afterwards prove of value to the country. Yet somehow this does not seem a satisfactory part to be playing, if we do nothing more.

No, the real duty that lies before us is a larger one. We must give. By giving is not meant only the sending over of money for patriotic purposes or the buying of tags for the benefit of a Red Cross Fund. These are only a small part of what we can do to help on our cause. What is needed just now even more than their money is sympathy, a feeling of cohesion and co-operation among all the men of the nation. Without the existence of this feeling, our efforts are largely wasted. And note that by sympathy we do not mean the sickly sentimentality that is always ready to gush forth without cause. This and everything like it constitute something that has always been allowed to college men of the right kind. But in a hundred little ways we can show the men who are doing the hardest task of all for their Empire that we are with them and that all the right thinking men, at least, are united in their effort.

We have a splendid body of representatives at the front. Let us agree to show ourselves worthy of their companionship, that when they return they may not be ashamed to shake our hands.

"THE MCGILL DAILY."

The McGill Daily to-day enters upon the seventh year of its existence as the only College Daily in the Dominion of Canada. During these past six years the Daily, as was natural, was subjected to numerous trying losses and reverses; but despite all has thrived, and the latter years of its history have been marked with a phenomenal development. During its primeval stage the Daily was regarded more or less as a joke by those in authority. A sheet which was tolerated but which, to seriously peruse, was beneath the dignity of a member of the Faculty. But the past three years have been characterized by a marked acquisition of prestige, and influence which is more than satisfactory. The Daily has, in proving itself virtually a newspaper, gained both the respect and serious consideration of both students and University authorities.

As a medium between the student body and the academic and social activities of the University, we are disposed to believe that the Daily has attained indispensability. The purpose of the McGill Daily has been, and is, to impartially, correctly and faithfully keep before the eyes of the undergraduates and graduates the news which vitally concerns and interests them. To this end the Daily has been striving, we are proud and gratified to believe, not unsuccessfully.

The excellent progress which the Daily has made during the past three years is all the more worthy of remark when we consider the ravages which have periodically depleted the staff. Time and again the ranks have been discouragingly shattered. However, despite these very material losses, and in spite of the general spirit of depression which has more or less prevailed to the detriment of student activities, the Daily has forged ahead. This not-to-be-expected progressiveness is, prima facie, incompatible with the obstacles and difficulties which have confronted the Daily. However, a more intimate acquaintance with the circumstances of the case utterly dispel every incompatibility. Opposing the apparently unsurmountable barriers, we see aggressive and determined endeavour, coupled with self-sacrifice and tenacity of purpose. Those who established and constructed the Daily, as well as those who guided its progress, spared neither labour nor self-interest, and to them the Daily owes its present influence and prestige.

To-day, however, the McGill Daily enters upon the seventh year of its history, with scarcely a remnant of its former staff. We are faced with greater and more serious problems than have in recent years confronted us. And yet even in spite of these apparently almost insurmountable difficulties, are we to "back down," and allow the Daily—heretofore the pride of McGill—to sink into decay and oblivion? We are confident that such a course would not for a moment be acquiesced in or tolerated by the student body. But the Daily, in order to be sustained and maintained, MUST have new blood. We therefore—and we speak now particularly to those who enter the halls of McGill for the first time—look to you and the undergraduates as a whole to furnish the support necessary for the successful publication of the Daily. Do not regard the connecting of yourself with the Daily Staff as purely a self-sacrifice. Intimate association with the work of publication affords a good opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of newspaper work, and the ability to write concise, straightforward English. Above all, remember that it is YOUR duty as well as YOUR privilege to help the furtherance of this one of McGill's principal institutions.

CORRESPONDENCE

A MESSAGE FROM STRATHCONA HALL TO MCGILL STUDENTS.

The Editor of the "McGill Daily":

Dear Mr. Editor,—The first issue of "The McGill Daily" is always a momentous event at the beginning of each College term, and as a rule only matters of great importance and interest are given space in that issue. Realizing that fact, we who are interested in Strathcona Hall deeply appreciate the courtesy of the Editors of "The Daily" in permitting us, through this medium, to address a few words of welcome to all students of McGill as they enter upon their work for another session.

While our message is meant for all students in general, attending the University, and the affiliated Colleges, we have specially in mind at this time those men who have come up to McGill for the first time, and who may not as yet know what Strathcona Hall means to stand for in the life of the University.

We like the name "Strathcona Hall," and by no means do we wish it changed. But our real name is "The Young Men's Christian Association of McGill University." And please note that we emphasize the word Christian. We do so advisedly, because we do not wish to be misunderstood, or to appear under any false standards. Our organization is a Christian organization first, last and all the time, and we wish to gather round us that element in the University that will stand behind us in our policy of all development and maintenance of all that is cleanest and best in our young Canadian manhood. That is a frank statement of our policy, and whether you are in sympathy with it or not, we feel sure you will appreciate our coming out four square, so that the University public may know just where we stand.

A wrong idea has gone abroad throughout the student body that Strathcona Hall is a sort of club, for the special benefit of the select few who consider themselves fortunate—or unfortunate enough to secure rooms in the building. We wish to contradict that impression. Strathcona Hall is not such a club in any sense of the word. It is a wide open organization, based upon the principles enunciated above, and extending a warm welcome to all who wish to do so to make use of any of the privileges or conveniences therein provided. It grants special privileges to none, but extends an open invitation to all, who are willing to respect the few necessary rules governing such an institution. Remember, therefore, that non-residents have absolutely just as much right to the privileges of our building, as those who happen to have rooms therein.

Another fact worth noting is that we charge no definite membership fee. All members of the University who wish to come, are considered members of Strathcona Hall. 'Tis true we depend upon the student body for a certain amount toward our support, but such financial support is based upon a voluntary system. Once a year an opportunity is afforded the students to contribute voluntarily toward our work, and our confidence in them has not been misplaced, for they have always responded generously.

We trust the foregoing may help to make clear to all the motives and the policy of our organization. If you agree with us, jump into the game and help us create an atmosphere throughout our University which will be conducive to a virile type of Christianity—a clean, wholesome manhood that shall stand for the highest and best in life.

DONALD MACLEOD,
General Secretary.

The following appointments to the teaching staff have been made by the Board of Governors: Dr. F. H. Baxter to be Professor of Operative Surgery; Dr. Lawrence Thompson, Superintendent of the Dental Clinic; Dr. D. Prescott Mowry, Assistant in the Dental Clinic; Dr. W. E. Boyes, Lecturer in Dental History, Ethics and Economics; Mr. F. J. Cronk, Lecturer in Railway Engineering; Mr. James Weir, Lecturer in Surveying; and Mr. J. A. Coote, Lecturer in Mechanical Engineering. Mr. Errol McDougall and Mr. Graham Drinkwater have been appointed representatives of the committee of management of the Studium.

Extension Courses.

Several extension courses have been arranged for the winter. Sir William Peterson and Professor Macnaughton are to give a course on Greek Poetry.

Sir William will deliver the first lecture of the course on October 9th at 5 o'clock, in the Royal Victoria College. The first lecture, it is understood, will be open to the public.

Also it is believed that a beginners' Spanish course will be given two evenings a week, and two courses in Russian, one elementary and one advanced are included among the extension courses. In addition to the above, Prof. Evans will deliver a popular series of lectures on "The Chemistry of Everyday Things."

It is also possible that an extension course in journalism will be offered for the first time this winter by McGill. The proposed lecturer is Bernard K. Sandwell, and the course will bear the title, "An introduction to Journalism."

Board of Governors.

The death of Capt. Percival Molson, B.A., M.C., killed in action on July 4th, 1917, was the subject of a resolution expressing profound sorrow, passed at a recent meeting of the Governors of McGill University. It was couched in the following terms:

"O! Captain Molson it may be said with truth that he was a McGill man from his youth up. His athletic prowess as an undergraduate gave him a reputation that extended over the whole continent of America. And as he had been a leader among students, so as a graduate he wielded a far-reaching influence for good. Quite recently, and at a comparatively early age, he was chosen to serve as a member of the governing board, and the memory of his service in that capacity, marked as it was by the genuine modesty that was ingrained in him, as well as by an earnest and whole-hearted interest in everything that pertained to the well-being of the university, will always be appreciatively cherished by his sorrowing colleagues. The news of his gallant but untimely death touched their hearts, not only with the deepest feelings of personal sorrow, but also with a deep sense of regret that one who had been so good a power for good in the community should have been so prematurely taken away.

To the very end he was mindful of the interests of the institution of which he had always been so bright an ornament, and the board desires to express its great gratitude for his thoughtful bequest of a munificent sum of seventy-five thousand dollars, which he made to the university for purposes in connection with the new campus.

The secretary was requested to convey the above as an excerpt from the minutes of the meeting to the late Captain Molson's bereaved mother and to his brothers and sisters.

The Late R. C. Smith, K.C.

Reference was made also to the death of Mr. R. C. Smith, K.C., Professor of Commercial Law, whose funeral obsequies had just been attended by the Principal and other members of the board. In conveying to his widow and son an expression of deepest sympathy, the board desired to place on record its high appreciation of the eminent services rendered by the late Professor Smith to the teaching interests of the Faculty of Law, as well as its admiration for the intellectual ability and legal acumen which had gained for him so distinguished a place in the profession which he adorned and in the community to which he belonged. In the university he had made for himself a place that will not easily be filled, and his friends and colleagues mourned the loss of one to whom they were sincerely attached alike by professional and by personal ties.

The secretary was directed to convey the congratulations of the board to Sir Charles Blair Gordon, K.B.E., and Sir A. Campbell Geddes, K.C.B., Minister of National Service in London, upon the honors conferred on them for their eminent services in the prosecution of the war.

The board approved of arrangements for inaugurating a Department of Pharmacy during the forthcoming session, and of the appointment of Mr. A. J. B. Moore as Professor of Pharmacy and head of the department. The board approved also of arrangements for the erection by the Military Hospitals Commission of a hospital for returned soldiers on a site forming part of the Macdonald College property at Ste. Anne de Bellevue.

APPROVED GLUTTONY

There he stands—if he can be said to stand—or sits—if he can be said to sit. Huge, awkward and inert but not in the least menacing. That we are bound to believe is one of his worst points. If he were menacing our disgust would be quelled with fear or distrust and eventually we would doubtless put an end to him, and there our interest in him would cease. It is that inhumanly patient, silent, inviting attitude combined with his oblivion to human emotionality which makes him noteworthy. Then as we study his habits we are struck with his gross gluttony and laziness. Huge, greedy to a degree of insatiable, he confines himself in lowering silence to his corner of the efficient, silent, inert, yet alert to devour, he never sacrifices a single opportunity of catering to his amazing appetite. A glutton of disgusting proportions, impossible to satisfy, yet aggravatingly patient, and morosely silent.

"What a despicable specimen of humanity," you say—"a great over-nurtured beast—what an object of disgust." And yet, surprising though it may seem, he has his good qualities. His utter refusal to "butt in" or become aggressively interested in matters of editorial routine is a quality of no mean value. Then in addition to the above admirable quality—and this may surprise you—he is possessed of an utterly indispensable usefulness. "Truly a strangely mixed character," you say, "gluttonous, lazy and yet useful. Yes, despite our above uncomplimentary description of him, we repeat that he occupies in our office a position of real usefulness—a sphere of incalculable usefulness. Yes, we must admit that our hero is a stranger composition. In fact, being a tremendous consumer of strange compositions, it is perhaps not unnatural that he has acquired a strange make-up. Oh, thou most despised and despicable old monster—and yet without you our faithful, ever devouring old glutton over at our elbow, who could measure our incalculable loss. Without your open smiling countenance, how could we calmly welcome the bevy of over-ardent amateur poets who so constantly favour the precincts of our editorial sanctum with their presence. Yes, I repeat—and with feelings of deepest sincerity—that we could not bear up under so calamitous a catastrophe as the loss of our ever-faithful Old Waste Paper Basket.

HARVARD GRADS' MAGAZINE.

The September number of this excellent quarterly has some features which may fairly be deemed of exceptional interest. One of these is Lieut.-Col. Paul Azan's address on the Spirit of the French troops. Col. Azan was the head of the French Military Mission to Harvard University. His colleagues were Major J. de Reyers de Maun, Captain M. E. de Jarny, Captain A. Dupont, Lieutenant J. Morize, and Second Lieutenant J. Jiraudoux. The portraits of these six officers form the frontispiece to the magazine.

There are obituaries of four other Harvard men, President William de Witt Hyde of Bowdoin; Professor Herbert Langford Warren; Justice William Henry Moody, of the U. S. Supreme Court; and Professor John

C. O. T. C. NEWS COMING.

In the light of recent developments, it seems more than likely that military training of a systematic kind will occupy an important place in the curriculum. Captain Simpson, of the C. O. T. C., on being interviewed by a Daily representative, stated that although as yet nothing absolutely definite had been ascertained from the heads of the various faculties, he would be prepared to make an announcement shortly. He also stated that he is at present applying himself to the task of making ready this announcement on Tuesday morning.

Williams White. An anonymous graduate has supplied from his diary a vivid picture of the scene that he witnessed at President Felton's inauguration. President-Emeritus Eliot and Dr. Walcott have added their recollections of what occurred on that occasion (1890). They both bear witness to the accuracy of the unnamed graduate, and Dr. Eliot commends the correctness of both the graduate and Dr. Walcott.

An address before the Harvard Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa (June 18, 1817), by the president of Amherst College, Dr. Alexander Melkeljohn, entitled "Flat Justitia—The College as Critic," is well worth reading. The subject is really (as Dr. Melkeljohn explains in beginning his address), "American Colleges." He says: "I feel justified in presenting this theme to-day because of the relationship between the society of Phi Beta Kappa and the liberal college. I suppose a member of the society may be defined as 'a person who has been very successful in a liberal college.' To know one of these institutions is then to know the other."

Among the remaining contents are Book Reviews, Student Life.

COURSE OF LECTURES.

An interesting series of popular educational lectures will be delivered this autumn by Dr. W. Harvey-Jellie. These will include a course of studies in history, and another in literature, and are to be delivered in the Y.M.C.A., Drummond street, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, at 4 p.m., commencing the first week in October.

Dr. Harvey-Jellie is an honor graduate of the universities of London and Paris, and has had wide experience as a university lecturer.

R. V. C. NOTES.

The number of women students in the University this year promises to be fully equal to that of the past year. Fifty-six students are beginning their undergraduate courses now while forty-five, thirty-nine and twenty-three have registered in the second, third and fourth years respectively.

Many requests for admission to residence in the R. V. C. have had to be refused owing to lack of sufficient accommodation.

HINDERING THE NATION.

"Muddle-headed, pigeon-livered pacifists," who either are short-sighted or afraid to fight, were denounced by President Jacob Gould Schurman, of Cornell in addressing the 3,355 students who assembled for the re-opening of the University. Pacifists, he declared, are hindering the work of the nation.

THE CASE OF THE PUNKH RUBY

—A Tale of Sprague Henneidy.

It was a lovely evening as the train which was bearing Sprague Henneidy and myself drew up at the little station at Toodembaud in the Decan. The long journey out to India had been quite uneventful, but we were now on the verge of an experience which was to prove one of the most thrilling of my life. Of this, however, I had no suspicion as I descended to the station platform, assisted by the native porter.

Perhaps the reader will require some enlightenment as to the reason for my presence at such an out-of-the-way place as Toodembaud. It came about in this way. One dull October evening Sprague and I were seated before the hearth, I smoking and reading, and he busy with some mechanical contrivance. Suddenly the bell rang. Sprague went to the door, and returned in a moment with a telegram in his hand, and an air of eager expectation about him. "Hurry, Jimson!" he cried. "Pack our trunk right away; we are off for India to-morrow!"

"India!" I exclaimed, "why, what has happened? Why do you want to go to India?" "This telegram," replied he, "is from our old friend, the Clam Chowder of Toodembaud, and he wishes me to go out immediately to lend him my aid on a rather dangerous case. Of course you will come; I can't possibly carry that heavy valise." "Oh, Sprague, how kind of you!" I cried, "I'll get ready right away. But what is the nature of this case?"

"Another jewel case," said the great detective, "you remember, of course, the case of the Clam's pearls. Now it appears that a band of miscreants is after a famous stone, the Punkh ruby, which has been in the possession of the Clam's family for nineteen generations. They want me to help in protecting it." And Sprague turned away in deep thought, muttering, "Hurry up with the trunks, please."

So it was that we found ourselves on the platform of Toodembaud, looking around for the Clam or some of his retainers who might have come to meet us. As we waited, a huge figure loomed up before us in the evening mist. It was that of an immensely tall Hindu, who was clad in a picturesque flowing robe of chrome green with an ultramarine turban. "My name is Heerim Singh, sirs," he said, in perfect English, and I am sent by the Clam Chowder of Toodembaud to bring you to his residence, which is only a short distance away."

With these words he whistled shrilly, and a large elephant with gaily-decked howdahs, trotted up and, seizing us in turn in its trunk, deposited us upon his back. We then set off at full gallop for the Clam's palace. In a few moments we entered a dark forest of quartered oak, and as we did so, our guide's countenance changed. Leaning towards us his face lighted up with a smile of fiendish malice, he hissed, "Aha! Trapped! By Allah! You are in my power, Sprague Henneidy!" We had been kidnapped by the would-be purloiners of the Punkh ruby!

As Heerim Singh pronounced the words, he pulled out a revolver and covered us. Sprague smiled quietly. "I am afraid, Heerim Singh, that your calculations have been upset," he remarked. "If you will take the trouble to look out of the window, you will see that we are drawing up outside the Clam's palace." "What!" howled our enemy, as he thrust his head forth and gazed around. In a second, Sprague had whipped out his patent collapsible jack, and had placed it under Heerim Singh. Just as the latter turned round with a smothered exclamation, he pressed the button. The result was appalling. With a terrific splintering crash, the whole top of the howdah was prized off and taking the Hindu with it, it dropped over the elephant's side. "Ha! ha!" laughed Sprague, "there was a good thickener of prickly pear-trees just where he fell." "Sprague!" I exclaimed, "what a marvel you are!"

Without deigning a reply, the great sleuth turned his attention to stopping the steed, which was still thundering onwards. In a few minutes we burst into a large clearing, in the centre of which stood a house. Simultaneously with our appearance a loud report shook the ground and a cannon ball missed our heads by a few feet. The elephant began to rush wildly about the clearing, and I began to have fears for our safety. Sprague, with his quiet, confident smile, pulled out a short iron rod, with a blunt hook at the end. This he dug into the creature's ribs with all his force. "What on earth are you doing?" Sprague, I gasped as I strove to keep my balance on the back of our mount. "Wait and see," replied Henneidy, calmly.

Almost immediately the elephant's speed slackened and he threw his trunk aloft, at the same time indulging in some remarkable contortions. Finally he stopped altogether, just in front of the house, and we slid off his back. He immediately turned and vanished into the forest. "How did you stop him?" I queried in amazement. "Ticked him," answered Sprague, laughing noiselessly at my bewilderment. And it was true; by tickling the ribs of the huge creature Sprague had compelled him to howl to our will.

We approached the door of the house, and immediately noted just inside it a small cannon of an ancient type, which a wildly excited native was striving to re-load. Just as we were advancing, he gave it up in despair, and throwing up his hands, disappeared into the house. As he did so, however, a short and extremely stout Hindu gentleman, clad in a pink tunic, with Alice blue sash, darted forth and greeted us affectionately.

"Ah! Sprague Henneidy," he cried. "How relieved I am to see you at last! My idiot of a servant took you for some of Heerim Singh's minions, and fired at you; I hope he did no harm. We were beginning to fear you had been kidnapped by our enemies."

As he spoke, he drew us within the door and hurried us up a flight of stairs. We entered a large, low-ceilinged room, the air of which was heavy with the scent of opium, gum-arabic and other of roses. Two men who had been seated in arm-chairs rose as we came in.

"Two of my friends, Mr. Henneidy," said the Clam (for we had recognized our host at once) "to the right is the Ram Basti of Shatubul, and to the left the Jam Boree of Tonsobri." The native princes bowed low and muttered something that sounded like "Salamun you!" "Now, Mr. Henneidy," went on the Clam Chowder, speaking rapidly and nervously, "What do you consider the best methods of defence against our foes? You realize, I hope, that the Punkh ruby must be kept in my possession at any cost; unless, of course," he added, hastily, "you care to purchase it or some other of my crown jewels. I assure you, I can let you have them at cut rates and—"

"It is too late to-night to make my plans," said Henneidy, interrupting him, "show me to my room." Jimson, come with me." We left the three potentates eagerly devouring hashish, bakshish, and other sordid drugs out of a large bowl that stood on the table near at hand, and mounted another flight of stairs to a small chamber, where we were to pass the night.

Sprague's baggage had arrived before us, and our trunks were piled in a corner. At the door of the room, as body-guard, stood the native who had unsuccessfully discharged his cannon at us, with a drawn hookah in his hand. "Kindly go down stairs and see if it is raining," said Sprague to him. The Hindu vanished abruptly. "A mere trick to get rid of him," whispered Henneidy in my ear. "One never knows who may be a spy in these Eastern lands. And now, to make my preparations for the night."

So saying, he dragged from a trunk a t-square, a foot rule and a large bag of what proved to be clay marbles. "What are those for, Sprague?" I asked, in my brainless fashion. "Watch," replied he tersely.

He then proceeded, with the aid of the rule and t-square, to divide the floor into a number of squares; at the intersection of each line he placed a marble. He then drew back and considered his work, chuckling. Next, he drew from his valise a strange-looking piece of machinery, a little like one of his machine guns, but with a cylinder for compressed air below the barrel, and a large tank on top of it. I could not help inquiring its nature from the great detective.

"This," said he, with pardonable pride in his tones, "this is my new patent mercury quick-firer. It is operated by compressed air and instead of a leaden bullet, fires a jet of mercury which stuns without killing the object at which it is fired, like a jet from a hose." "Marvelous, Sprague," I exclaimed, overcome at his resourcefulness.

After placing the mercury gun in position we undressed and flung ourselves down on a rug behind the door, Sprague being too wily to sleep in the bed, for fear our enemies made a midnight attack. In a few minutes all was silent except for the noisy clatter of Sprague's ingersoll, which he had flung on the gun. The hours passed slowly, and I was gradually dozing off when I was awakened by a loud noise in my ear.

HEAVY LOSSES SUFFERED BY MCGILL DURING THE SUMMER FIGHTING IN VARIOUS THEATRES OF WAR

Nearly Fifty McGill Graduates, Undergraduates or Past Students Have Lost Their Lives on Active Service — With British Expeditionary Forces in France, Flanders and Macedonia.

Since this publication suspended for the summer vacations, the casualties suffered by former members of the University now on active service have been unduly severe, owing, no doubt, to the bitterness of the fighting in which units of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, with which the majority of them are serving, have taken part. Every action in which Canadian troops have taken part and most of the offensive movements in which British regulars and territorials have participated, has resulted in further additions to the casualty list of the University, the fatalities on which have now reached the number of 204.

Among the prominent McGill men who have lost their lives have been Major J. L. Dashwood, of the teaching staff of Macdonald College; Major J. A. Delancey, a member of the original Students Council of 1909; Captain H. Donald Henry, sometime editor of McGill Daily; Capt. Percy Molson, M.C., a Governor of the University; Major H. C. Symmes, a graduate of some years standing who enlisted in South Africa; Lieut. Kimball F. Keeping, formerly of the Students Council; Lieut. C. Spurgeon McKenzie, also a former member of the Council; Capt. F. Bassell Winter, who won the military Cross with bar; and others.

The list follows:

KILLED IN ACTION.

Allen, Flight Sub-Lieut. Hugh. — Flight Sub-Lieut. Hugh Allen, Arts '18, of the Royal Naval Air Service, was shot down in an aerial encounter on the Western front on July 6. Flight Sub-Lieut. Allen was the only son of Sir Montagu Allan, Montreal, and was born in this city on October 26, 1896. He attended Eton and in 1914 entered the class of Arts '18 as a partial student. When the 42nd Highland Battalion was raised, Flight Sub-Lieut. Allen, who held a commission in the 6th Royal Highlanders of Canada, joined it and went overseas. In England he was appointed to the Canadian Headquarters staff as an aide-de-camp, a position he relinquished early last summer to join the Royal Naval Air Service. Two of his sisters were lost in the sinking of the Lusitania. Sir Montagu Allan is now engaged in work on the Canadian Pensions Board in London.

Brown, 2nd Lieut. John S. — Second Lieut. John Samuel Brown, killed in action on May 18, was the second member of his class, Medicine '17, to die on the field of battle. Shortly after war was declared, 2nd Lieut. Brown enlisted in No. 1 Canadian Field Ambulance then being recruited in Montreal and ultimately rose to the rank of staff sergeant. After almost two years on active service with No. 1 Field Ambulance in France, he took out a commission in the Artillery, and was reported killed in action on May 18, being then attached to a battery of the Royal Garrison Artillery. 2nd Lieut. Brown was for two years a member of Medicine '17, and was the second son of W. H. Brown, St. Foye road, Quebec, but was born in Port Hope, Ont., on November 16, 1890. In 1910 2nd Lieut. Brown was graduated with honors from Bishop's College, Lennoxville, and for two years before coming to McGill he taught classics at Rotherham Collegiate School, New Brunswick.

Call, Captain G. W. — Captain George Walter Call, Arts '18, who fell at the head of his platoon fighting on the Arras front in May, was the son of W. B. Call, of Galt, Ont., and was born in Dundas, Ont., on May 31, 1888. Before entering the University of Toronto, Capt. Call was engaged as a teacher in the public schools of Galt. He spent two years at Toronto, and in 1915 entered Second Year Arts at McGill. Following the completion of his session he enlisted as a lieutenant in the 11th South Waterloo battalion and went to France as a captain, with a western Ontario infantry battalion. Capt. Call was studying to enter the Presbyterian ministry.

Christie, Lieut. J. H. H. — Lieut. John Hatched Halloway Christie, Arts '18, killed in action in April, intended entering the Methodist ministry, and was a student of the Montreal Wesleyan College. He enlisted with a unit of the Canadian Army Medical Corps and later secured a transfer with the rank of lieutenant in the Canadian Mounted Rifles. As such he fell in the Canadian advance on the Vimy front. Lieut. Christie was born in Glenavoy, Ireland, on October 28, 1891, and was the son of Mr. William J. Christie, Ballynahinch, Ireland.

Clark, Capt. L. E. — Captain Lewis Emerson Clark, Med. '13, of the Canadian Army Medical Corps, killed in action on June 7, was serving in France with No. 2 Canadian Field Ambulance, which he joined early in the war. He was engaged in the practice of his profession at Vancouver before enlistment. Born at Ellsworth, Kansas, on December 21, 1888, he came to McGill in 1908 and was graduated in 1913. From 1907-9 he was a member of the staff of the Vancouver Post Office. Capt. Clark was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Clark, 855 Eighth avenue west, Vancouver, and went overseas in May, 1916. In the following June he became attached to a base hospital at Boulogne and finally joined a Montreal battalion as Medical Officer. He was instantly killed by shellfire while engaged in his duties.

Dashwood, Major John. — Killed in action in France on April 13, 1917, was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Dashwood, 484 Kingston road, Toronto, and previous to enlistment was assistant in English at Macdonald College. Originally Major Dashwood joined the Royal Flying Corps, but later transferred to the infantry, being wounded in August, 1916. At the time of his death he was Lewis gun officer of the 58th Battalion, E.F., and was killed in the taking of Vimy Ridge. In June it was announced that Major Dashwood had been awarded the Military Cross.

Davidson, Capt. D. A. — Captain Donald A. Leslie Davidson, M.C., past student of the Royal Flying Corps, who was killed in action on April 30, was born at Woolwich, England, on October 6, 1891. He left his home in London in 1908 and entered the double course in Arts and Science at McGill. In the session 1909-10, he was a student in the Faculty of Science alone. After leaving the University, Captain Davidson was employed on the engineering staff of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the West, and soon after war was declared returned to England, volunteering his services for the Royal Flying Corps. He was stationed in Mesopotamia for some months and received the Military Cross for gallantry in dropping food for the beleaguered garrison in Kut. At the same time he was badly wounded in an engagement with a Fokker, and while recovering from his wounds he studied several European languages and acted as page of honor to Queen Alexandra. He was the elder son of the late Colonel L. Davidson, R.A., who died on active service in 1915, and of Lady Theodore Davidson, sister of the present Lord Albemarle.

Davidson, 2nd Lieut. D. G. — Second Lieut. David Grant Davidson, Sci. '17, of the Royal Flying Corps, who was killed in action on August 21, was the son of William Davidson, 419 Metcalfe avenue, Montreal. He was born in Montreal on February 14, 1896, and in 1913 entered the Faculty of Applied Science. In the spring of 1915, when McGill was asked to furnish a number of operators for service with the Divisional Signal Co., Lieut. Davidson offered his services and was accepted. He served in France with the Divisional Signal Co. until he took out a commission in the Royal Flying Corps. He had been in France for the second time since April, 1917.

Delancey, Major James Arnold, M.C. — Sci. '09, was acting officer in command of the 25th Battalion, C. E. F., when he fell in the attack on Vimy Ridge, late in April. He was first reported missing, believed killed, and on the discovery of his body on April 10, was reported killed. Lieutenant took place at Neuville St. Vaast. Major Delancey was a member of the original Students' Council of the University, and took a keen interest in undergraduate affairs. Born at Middleton, N. S., he followed his studies there and was also engaged in educational work before coming to the University. In the summer of 1906 he was on the staff of the Montreal High School, and in 1906-07 was principal of Dufferin School. After graduation Major Delancey was engaged in engineering work in Panama and later entered upon the practice of his profession in Vancouver, B.C. He went overseas with the 25th as machine gun officer, and later as captain and adjutant, was twice mentioned in despatches and twice wounded. While captain of a brigade staff, he was awarded the Military Cross for services on the Somme and in February last was recalled to assume temporary command of his old battalion, in which position he lost his life on Eastern Monday.

Derochie, 2nd Lieut. M. C. — Second Lieut. Matthew Curtis Derochie, Med. '19, of the 27th Squadron, Royal Flying Corps, missing since July 14, is believed to have been killed on that date. His father, Curtis P. Derochie, Cornwall, Ont., recently received a letter from Cox and Co., Bankers, London, stating that Second Lieut. Derochie, was reported in a German newspaper as being killed in an air raid, while on Saturday last came a letter from the British War Office, saying "the name of Second Lieut. C. M. Derochie, R.F.C., who was reported missing on July 14, 1917, appears in a list of English air losses published by the Fordeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, on August 18, with the single remark 'dead' against it. This information is considered to be probably correct, but will not be accepted officially till the lapse of a rather longer period."

In October, 1916, Lieut. Derochie joined the Flying Corps and the same month left for England to train and made, such a capable aviator that he was given a chance to return to America as an aviation instructor, but preferred to remain overseas and do his bit. In May last he went to France and took part in a number of successful raids, being finally brought down in German territory on July 14. The late Lieut. Derochie was in his 22nd year, and at the time he enlisted was about to commence his third year in medicine at McGill, where he took an active part in college life, being on the staff of the McGill Daily. He was in his second year elected president of his year.

Gibbins, Lieut. G. G. — Lieut. Gwynn Gilbert Gibbins, Sci. '10, Arts '11, of the Royal Engineers, who was killed in action with the Saloniki forces, on July 26, was born in Leicester, England, on June 14, 1888, the son of Dr. Johnson Gibbins, now in Vancouver, B.C. He attended McGill College of British Columbia, and entered the Faculty of Applied Science at McGill in his third year in 1908. In 1910 he secured his degree in Science and the following year was granted his degree in Arts. He also did post-graduate work in Science in 1910-11, and received the degree of Master of Science in 1911. Lieut. Gibbins joined the Royal Engineers in 1916, being at that time the Montreal representative of a large British mining concern. He was accidentally wounded while, with his friend, Lieut. Eric Billington, examining unexploded German shells in January, 1916, and upon recovery was sent to the Saloniki front, where he was killed on July 26 last.

Gordon, Capt. M. L. — Capt. Maitland Lockhart Gordon, Sci. '06, killed in action on May 7, had been three times wounded on active service. He was the son of W. H. Lockhart Gordon, 79 Adelaide street east, Toronto, and after being graduated from the Royal Military College at Kingston, took the Science course at McGill. When war was declared he was a civil engineer in Vancouver. He immediately joined the Canadians and at Ypres was wounded. Later he transferred to the Gordon Highlanders and had been twice wounded. On May 7 he was reported missing in a trench raid and in August was reported to have died on that date.

Henry, Captain H. D. — Captain Hugh Donald Henry, Arts '14, who was killed in action on August 15, at the taking of Hill 70, was while a student at the University keenly interested in student activities and served as associate editor-in-chief of "McGill Daily" in 1913-14. He also was a leading member of the Students' Orchestra. Born in Montreal on January 31, 1893, Capt. Henry was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Henry, 427 Mackay street. He attended the Montreal High School, and in 1910 entered the Faculty of Arts from which he was graduated in 1914. Capt. Henry then took a post-graduate course in theology at Westminster Hall, Vancouver, B.C., and in 1915 was ordained to the Presbyterian ministry. He was minister of the Vancouver Heights Presbyterian church when he enlisted as a lieutenant in the 158th Battalion. He went overseas, with captain's papers, in November, 1916, and after a month was drafted to the 7th Battalion in France, with which unit he served until killed. Capt. Henry was known throughout his division as "the Fighting Parson."

McDougall, Lieut. C. H. — Lieut. Clarence Hobart McDougall, Sci. '05, fell during the fighting on the Arras front on May 4. He was born at South Maitland, N.S., on September 13, 1878, attended the local schools and in 1900 entered the Faculty of Science. In 1905 he was graduated in Mining Engineering. Previous to enlistment as a lieutenant in the Canadian Engineers, Lieut. McDougall was superintendent of the Sullivan and St. Eugene mines at Marysville, B.C. He joined the Engineers in 1916 and in due course of time became attached to a unit in the field with which he had done splendid work. He was the son of Gilmore McDougall, Clifton, N.S.

McKenzie, Lieut. C. S. — Lieut. Charles Spurgeon McKenzie, Arts '14, Med. '18, who was killed in action on May 18, was a well known leader in undergraduate affairs during his period at the University. In athletics especially he made his mark and served as President of the Track Club with a seat on the Students Council of 1913-14. Born in Charlottetown, P. E. I., on January 18, 1892, Lieut. McKenzie attended Prince of Wales College there and displayed marked ability as a scholar. In 1911 he entered Second Year Arts and in 1914 secured his Arts degree, at the same time continuing his studies in Medicine. When No. 6 Field Ambulance was organized in the winter of 1914-15, Lieut. McKenzie enlisted as a private and ultimately rose to the rank of sergeant. Subsequently, he had an opportunity to return to McGill to complete his course in Medicine, but instead he chose to take out a commission in the Artillery and attended a course of training in England. He had only been a few months on the firing line with the 4th Battery, C. E. F., when he was killed in action. Lieut. McKenzie has two brothers also on active service, Sgt. J. W. McKenzie, Med. '17, and Corp. C. McKenzie, Arts '17. He was a member of the Board of Directors of the McGill Y. M. C. A., president of Arts '14, in its junior year, and member of the track team in 1911 and 1912 as a high jumper.

McLean, Lieut. W. J. — During the fighting in front of Vimy in April, Lieut. William John McLean, Dent. '14, who was serving with an Eastern Ontario Battalion, was killed in action. Lieut. McLean came from Perth, Ont., where he was born on February 25, 1890, and in 1908 entered the Department of Dentistry at McGill, from which he was graduated in 1914 with the degree of D.D.S. He was the son of David McLean, Perth.

Maclean, Lieut. Donald. — The trench mortar bomb which killed Capt. Percy Molson, on July 4, was also responsible for the death of Lieut. Donald Maclean, past student of the P.C.E.L.I. Lieut. Maclean was born at Valleyfield, Que., September 18, 1890, but early in life removed with his parents to British Columbia. He was a student in First Year Arts at McGill in 1912-13. In the spring of 1915, Lieut. Maclean came east and enlisted as a private in the First University Company, under Captain Gregor Wheeler, at the Camp at Niagara-on-the-lake the same spring he was promoted to sergeant and for ten months he served with this rank, finally receiving a commission for his good work at the front. Lieut. Maclean was a soldier of splendid appearance and was an expert wrestler. He was the son of Roderick Maclean, Burnaby, B.C. Lieut. Maclean was mentioned in despatches a short time before he met his death.

Masson, Fit. Lieut. D. H. — Flight-Lieutenant Donald Howe Masson, past student of the Royal Naval Air Service, killed in action on April 21, was the son of Robert Masson, of Ottawa, and one of three brothers in khaki. He was born in Ottawa on August 26, 1889, attended Ashbury College and the Ottawa Collegiate Institute and spent two years in the Faculty of Science at McGill with the class of '12. Early in 1916 he decided to enter the flying corps and took a course at the Flying School at Dallas, Texas, going overseas immediately. He had served for some months at the front before being hit. As an able, Flight-Lieut. Masson possessed a considerable reputation. He was always interested in outdoor athletics and was proficient at football, baseball and hockey, besides being a swimmer of renown and the champion swimmer of the Britannia Boating Club regattas for some years.

Molson, Capt. P. M.C. — Captain Percival Molson, M.C., Arts '01, of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, who was killed in action on July 4, was born at Cacouna, Que., — years ago, the son of John Thomas Molson, of Montreal. He was educated at the Montreal High School and at McGill, where he took his B.A. in 1901. Deciding upon a business career he entered the Montreal offices of the National Trust Co., junior clerk and was promoted until he became manager. He was a shareholder in various corporations and was interest-

WESLEYAN PRIN. RETURNED FROM FIRING LINE

Major the Rev. James Smythe had Interesting Experiences.

TELLS OF MCGILL MEN.

While in England Visited and Investigated Historical Haunts of Literary Genius.

Major the Rev. James Smythe, Principal of the Wesleyan Theological College, and Dean of the Joint Theological Faculties, returned from England last week. Major Smythe, who went overseas as senior chaplain of the Canadian Irish Rangers, returns after an interesting and varied experience in England and at the front. After the dissolution of the Irish Canadian Rangers as a unit, Major Smythe was actively engaged in work in England. During the four months spent in the Old Country the Major found time to visit and investigate the old homes and relics of many of England's literary nobles. He was all through Dr. Johnson's house, saw the very room in which the famous Dictionary was edited, and investigated the many interesting things connected with the brilliant old author. The home of Goldsmith he also visited, as well as that of Dickens, and the many haunts which the latter held so dear. Dr. Smythe secured numerous slides taken in connection with these interesting investigations, and announced his intention of delivering a lecture upon the result of his visits at a later date.

Also while in England, Principal Smythe visited Oxford, to find that with regard to academic work, they were practically closed, although as centres of military training they presented a lively appearance. There were soldiers everywhere. While at ed in different real estate holdings. As an athlete, Capt. Molson was recognized while a student at McGill as probably the best all-round man in the Canadian Universities. Later he represented the M. A. A. A. on the track, being prominent in the 440 yards and in the long jump, in which he distinguished himself at the U. S. championships at St. Louis. He was also famous as a rugby player for the M.A.A.A.

Capt. Molson was an officer of the McGill C. O. T. C. when he enlisted as second in command of the Second University Company, reinforcing the P.C.E.L.I. He went to the front in June, 1915, and on June 2, 1916, was wounded in the face. He was invalided home and spent the summer in Montreal. In the fall of 1916 he returned to the front. Capt. Molson was awarded the Military Cross in June, 1917. He was a Governor of the University.

Pearse, 2nd Lieut. W. J. — Second Lieut. Walter Josiah Pearse, past student of X Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, who was killed in action in April, was the Rhodes Scholar from British Columbia in 1911, and attained a high degree of excellence as a scholar and athlete while at the University. He enlisted as a trooper in King Edward's Horse at the commencement of the war, but soon afterwards won his commission in the Royal Horse Artillery. Subsequently he was several times wounded and in February, 1917, was gassed. Apparently he had but recently returned to his battery when he fell.

2nd Lieut. Pearse was born in Kamloops, B.C., and was 23 years old at the time of his death. He was the only son of E. T. W. Pearse, formerly gold commissioner for Kamloops, and attended the University School at Mount Tolmie, B.C., before coming to McGill. Here he rapidly gained recognition as a scholar and an athlete. He won the freshman tennis championship and in 1911 captured his big 'M' (Continued on Page 4.)

SOME FEAT.

When Sergt. William Bruce, of Winnipeg, was measured for the army, he stood five feet eight inches tall. Today he stands but five feet five inches and a half tall.

Two and a half inches of bone were taken from each leg at the ankle and both feet were grafted on again in a London hospital.

Prof. Swan, the King's own physician, made the operation in a London hospital, after Sergt. Bruce's ankles and wrists had been smashed in a shell explosion.

Grafting was done with silver wires. After many months, the bones knit, and Sergt. Bruce was able to walk. He has no ankle joint. His feet are permanently at right angles to his legs, but he can walk just as well.

A similar operation was performed on his wrists, but no bone was taken out.

Sergt. Bruce is now staying with his sister in Lynn, Mass.

Oxford the Major visited the rooms at one time occupied by Dr. Johnson, as well as those of John Wesley. He visited the room of the Holy Club, which in the scene of the founding of Methodism. In addition to Oxford, Principal Smythe paid a visit to Eton and Harrow. While at the latter he was greatly interested and thrilled by watching the former boys of the College, who had joined the Flying Corps, circling and hovering over the school for the benefit of their less fortunate classmates.

Major Smythe was invited by the British Foreign Office to visit the battlefield in France, and in connection with this trip he had many interesting and thrilling experiences. During his sojourn in France the Principal visited No. 3 (McGill) General Hospital and was entertained by Col. Birkett. At the time of arrival at the Hospital, a fête was being held in celebration of the 50th Anniversary of Confederation. Major Smythe met with several former McGill and Wesleyan men. Among others he met Capt. A. J. Martin, Med. '15, and a Wesleyan graduate and also Pte. Gordon Maxwell, Arts '17, who are connected with the McGill Hospital. Despite the fact that it is not permissible to visit specified persons, he ran across several other Wesleyan and McGill men in various branches of work. Among these was Pte. John Ward, originally of the 148th Battalion, now in the Highlanders. He also received news of Lt. H. Cotton, of the Flying Corps, who is at present a prisoner in Germany. Cotton entered the 148th Battalion as a private, but was later transferred to the Flying Corps, in connection with which he has done admirable work. Lieut. Cotton was shot down while flying at a height of 15,000 feet, and forced to land 16 miles back of the German lines. He states that he is being well treated, and is comfortable. Major Smythe also had news concerning Lieut. C. W. Topping, who was wounded at Vimy, and is now in England. Sergt. William Bunt, Arts '16, who was in the 148th Batt., has been connected for some time with the R.F.C., on active service in France. He is now in England on leave. Also Lieut. Williams, a former 148th man, has been transferred to the R.F.C.

During his stay in France, Major Smythe visited the entire British line from the coast to Messines, Baupenne and Vimy Ridge. He entertained the Daily representative who called upon him by displaying various interesting souvenirs from the battlefield. Principal Smythe visited the ruins of the Cathedral of Arras, and the shattered church of Baupenne. Among the trophies which the Major brought home with him is a German soldier's ammunition case, which had been pierced by a piece of flying shrapnel. This discarded bit of German equipment was picked up on Vimy Ridge. While at Vimy Major Smythe had a narrow escape from death, violent shell fire being suddenly directed toward the spot where the Major and other officers were standing. However, all scurried to the shelter of the dug-outs, and escaped injury. Another of the Principal's mementos is a battered German helmet, which he picked up in the Somme salient at a position which had formerly been bitterly and sanguinely contested.

Major Smythe intimated his intention of now retiring from military activity. During his nine months' absence Dr. Gifford has been acting Principal of the Wesleyan. The Principal does not extend any hope of having the usual large attendance during the College year. Many of the past students have enlisted, and the circumstances point to a great decrease in attendance.

INGENIOUS DEVICE.

An ingenious naturalist has been making the tomatis record their weight. In order to obtain the food weight, he places for them they have to alight upon what appears to be a twig, but is in reality the beam of a tiny scales. As they rest upon it, so they register their weight, which averages about one-third of an ounce per bird—forty-eight tomatis to the pound!

while a member of the senior inter-collegiate tennis team. He was also a member of the champion McGill track team, being a long distance runner. He had various undergraduate offices. In 1911 2nd Lieut. Pearce was chosen as Rhodes Scholar for British Columbia and thus left Third Year Arts to go to Oxford. When war broke out he was in his third year at University College, had won his M.A. and his B.A., and had passed into the Middle Temple, with the expectation of eventually returning to British Columbia to enter upon the practice of law.

2nd Lieut. Pearce was always an enthusiastic devotee of athletics. After leaving McGill he played tennis, cricket, football and polo, and was a member of the English ice hockey team representing Oxford and Cambridge, which toured Belgium, Switzerland, Austria and Germany. He was an accomplished musician and belonged to the O. T. C. at Oxford before enlisting.

Robertson, Lieut. H. A.—Lieut. Harry A. Robertson, past student, Canadian Infantry, killed in action on May 11, went overseas with the P.P.C.L.I. reinforcements in February, 1915, and in February last won his commission in the field. At the time of his death he was serving with the 44th Battalion, C.E.F. He attended lectures in the Faculty of Science during the sessions of 1907-08, and 1908-09, entering in his second year. He was born in Portage la Prairie, Man., on September 7, 1888, and was a nephew of W. H. Gardner, 21 Roslyn Avenue, Winnipeg, with whom he resided previous to enlistment. In civil life he was a manufacturers' agent in Winnipeg.

Robertson, 2nd Lieut. R. W. S.—Second Lieutenant Robert Ward Shepherd Robertson, Sci. '16, killed in action late in May, was one of the first McGill men to volunteer his services when the First Canadian Division was raised. Enlisting with the 14th Royal Montreal Regiment as a private, he served in the machine gun squad of that battalion for a considerable period before he was promoted in the field to a commission. After taking a course in England, 2nd Lieut. Robertson was gazetted to the Royal West Surrey Regiment and became machine gun officer. He served with this unit throughout the operations on the Somme and about St. Quentin, and previously was a participant in the second battle of Ypres, and in the actions of Giverny and Festubert. His senior officers spoke of 2nd Lieut. Robertson only in terms of praise, and he escaped without a scratch through all the fighting in which he took part. He was the younger son of Mrs. Ross Robertson, 213 Drummond street, and his brother, Captain Ross Robertson, was wounded at Courcellette. 2nd Lieut. Robertson was born in Montreal on June 24, 1894, and entered the Faculty of Applied Science in 1911. He was for three years a student in the Faculty.

Rowat, Lieut. T. A.—The death in action of Lieut. Thomas Alexander Rowat, past student, was announced as having taken place on June 28. Lieut. Rowat was the son of Rev. Andrew Rowat, St. Lambert, Que., and was born at Winchester, Ont., on Aug. 19, 1878. He attended Huntingdon Academy and in 1896 entered McGill as a student in the Faculty of Arts. At the close of his second year in Arts he withdrew to enter the service of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and later was stationed at various branches in the Eastern Townships. Previous to enlistment he was manager of a concern at Cobalt, Ont. Lieut. Rowat left Camp Borden in November, 1916, with a Western Infantry unit, and was sent to France a short time after his arrival in England. He had been in France continuously up to the time of his death, which took place in the fighting about Lens.

Scott, Lieut. W. D.—Lieut. William Douglas Scott, Sci. '14, of the Oxford and Buckinghamshire Light Infantry, killed in action in August, was class orator at his graduation in 1914. Afterwards he was employed in a Government survey in British Columbia. He then endeavored to enlist in the Canadian forces, but was rejected on account of defective eyesight. Going to England he took out a commission, and was attached to the Oxford and Bucks. He was the son of the late tutor of Merton College.

Smith, Flight Sub-Lieut. L. E.—After over two years on active service, Flight Sub-Lieutenant Lewis Ewing Smith, Sci. '16, of the Royal Naval Air Service, was reported killed in action on February 25, 1917, on which date he was reported missing in an aerial combat on the western front. Later, a German aviator dropped a message over the French lines stating that he had been buried in the Saalgumede cemetery with military honors. Lieut. Smith had been awarded the Croix de Guerre by the French War Office in recognition of his gallant services in the air. He was born at Pike River, Que., on December 8, 1890, and was the son of W. L. Smith, Esq., Mystic, Que. In 1910 he entered the Faculty of Applied Science, and completed a year's study, re-entering in 1913. He originally enlisted as a private in the 23rd Battalion, Westmount Rifles, and went overseas in the fall of 1914.

Symmes, Major H. C.—Major Howard Church Symmes, Sci. '97, was killed in action on April 9, while serving with the South African Infantry. At the time of the South African war, Major Symmes went to South Africa with a battery of artillery from Guelph, Ont. He served throughout the war, and at its close, remained in Johannesburg as electrical engineer for the Bureau of Mines. When the present war broke out, Major Symmes again enlisted and served with marked distinction, winning his majority in the field. He was 43 years of age, and the son of the late Thomas Symmes, Aymer, Que.

Waller, Lieut. J. C.—Lieut. John Charles Waller, Arts '17, of the Canadian Infantry, was killed in action in the fighting in which the Canadians took part in May. Born Aug. 20, 1895, at Karinzawa, Japan, he was the son of Rev. John G. Waller. He attended Trinity College School, Port Hope, Ont., and was residing at Cayuga, Ont., when he came to McGill to join Arts '17. After the completion of his first year, he did not return to the University, and not long afterwards he enlisted with a Central Ontario infantry battalion.

White, Flight Sub-Lieut. J. P.—After having been posted as missing for three months, Flight Sub-Lieutenant James Percy White, Sci. '18, of the Royal Naval Air Service, was reported in June as having been killed in an aerial encounter behind the German lines on March 4, 1917. Flight Sub-Lieut. White enlisted in February, 1915, while in his first year in Science at McGill. In the following June he received his pilot's certificate, and, after being retained for some time in England as an instructor, finally went to France, where he gained a considerable name for himself. In an aerial duel on March 4 he fell behind the German lines, and was killed. He was the youngest son of W. T. White, 70 Cornish Avenue, Winnipeg, was born in that city on May 6, 1895, and attended the Winnipeg Collegiate Institute before coming to McGill.

Williamson, Lieut. A. D.—Lieut. Alexander David Williamson, Sci. '14, of the Canadian Field Artillery, who was killed in action in August, was known as a brilliant athlete during his college course. He came into especial prominence through his connection with the championship McGill rugby football team and afterwards played for the M. A. A. A. senior team. On the outbreak of war he enlisted in the 21st Westmount Battery of Militia, and after qualifying for his commission at Kingston went overseas with a unit of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery. He was 25 years of age, the son of Thomas Williamson, 143 Westmount Boulevard, and attended Crichton School, Montreal, before entering McGill.

DIED OF WOUNDS.

Biddulph, Pte. R. H. H.—Pte. Richard Herbert Howell Biddulph, Sci. '12, of the Canadian Medical Services, who died of wounds on July 5, enlisted originally with the 5th Universities Company. He was at that time employed as a Civil Engineer in Northern Ontario. Pte. Biddulph served for an extended period in France with the P. P. C. L. I. before transferring to No. 2 Canadian Field Ambulance. He was attached to this unit when he met his death on July 5th. Pte. Biddulph was the son of R. P. S. Biddulph, 10 Castle Crescent, Reading, England.

Black, Lieut. E. P.—Lieut. Edgar Pattison Black, Sci. '18, of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, who died of wounds on June 9, left the University at the conclusion of his Freshman year to take a course at the Royal Military College, Kingston, to fit him for service overseas. In 1916 he went overseas with a draft from "C" Battery, Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, Kingston, and subsequently reached the front. Previous to becoming a student at McGill, Lieut. Black was at Bishop's College School, Lennoxville, where he won the Governor-General's gold medal in 1913. He was twenty years of age, the son of J. P. Black, 21 Cote des Neiges Road, and one of four brothers serving overseas.

de Gruchy, Lieut. C. S., M.C.—Lieut. Charles Southwell deGruchy, M.C., Sci. '11, who died of wounds on July 18, was the son of Philip deGruchy, 638 Belmont Avenue, Westmount, and went overseas in 1916 in command of a draft of artillery from Montreal. At the time of his death he was attached to the 10th Battery, C.F.A. Lieut. deGruchy was awarded the Military Cross last winter for displaying great courage and skill in establishing and maintaining communication under very heavy fire, and materially assisting in the success of an operation. After graduation in Civil Engineering he was employed with the celebrated engineering firm of Waddell and Harrington, Kansas City, and when he enlisted was engaged on the Ocean Terminals construction at Halifax. He was in his 27th year. Lieut. deGruchy was wounded on July 13.

Frame, Lieut. William L.—Lieut. William Layton Frame, Sci. '15, died of wounds on June 11, was a member of the McGill C.O.T.C. during his final year before he joined the 121st Western Irish battalion as a private. Later he secured a commission in another Western Infantry battalion. Born in Virden, Man., on June 20, 1894, he attended the Virden High School, and later McGill College of British Columbia. He entered Science '15 at McGill in his third year. Lieut. Frame was wounded on April 9 at the taking of Vimy Ridge. He was the son of J. F. Frame, Vancouver, B.C., and was employed for two summers on survey work in Northern British Columbia.

Keeping, Lieut. K. F.—Lieut. Kimball Fletcher Keeping, Sci. '14, of the Canadian Artillery, died of wounds in September, was the son of William Keeping, Murray Harbor, P.E.I., where he was born on August 30, 1886. He took a course at the State Normal School, Dakota, and in 1910 entered the Faculty of Science, from which he was graduated, after a particularly brilliant course, as a civil engineer in 1914. In his Sophomore year Lieut. Keeping was secretary of his class, and in the following year acted as president. The same year he was elected president of the Science Undergraduates' Society, and occupied a seat on the Students' Council in that capacity.

After graduation, Lieut. Keeping was on the Dominion Geodetic Survey and on the Alaska Boundary Survey. In the winter of 1915-16 he took a course in siege artillery at the school at Halifax, and made such an excellent impression that he was retained as an instructor. Major W. D. Tait, who organized the McGill Siege Battery, was successful in securing his services as a subaltern for his battery, and in the late summer of 1916 he went overseas with this battery. Two brothers of Lieut. Keeping are at the front.

PRESUMED DEAD.

Chauvin, Lieut. E. H.—Lieut. Edward Henry Chauvin, Arts '16, of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, who was listed as presumed dead in June, was the son of Henry N. Chauvin, K.C., Montreal, in which city he was born on July 15, 1894. He passed through the Montreal High School, and in 1912 entered the Faculty of Arts at McGill. In February, 1915, he enlisted for overseas service as a lieutenant in the 5th Canadian Mounted Rifles battalion, and on July 17, 1915, sailed from Quebec on the S.S. Hesperian. The unit reached France on October 8, 1915. Lieut. Chauvin was slightly wounded on June 2, 1916, at Maple Corps, but in ten days' time returned to duty. In the latter part of August, 1916, the 5th C.M.R. was removed to the Somme front, and on September 15-16 it took part in the fighting for Courcellette. On October 1, 1916, the regiment, with three other battalions, attacked Regina Trench, lying beyond Courcellette, strongly fortified and held. Owing to the difficulty of observing, the attack was made before the enemy wire had been destroyed, and although part of the trench was taken, the Canadians were forced to retire after holding it for twelve hours. Lieut. Chauvin was in command of "B" Company, and was shot while attempting to find an opening through the enemy's wire. He fell into a shell hole, and was never afterwards seen. He was mentioned in General Sir Douglas Haig's despatch published in January, 1917.

Fotheringham, Lieut. J. B.—Lieut. John Beveridge Fotheringham, Sci. '16, of the Canadian Infantry (attached Royal Flying Corps), was reported missing on July 7, and is believed to have been killed on that date. Lieut. Fotheringham was born in Ottawa 25 years ago, and was a son of Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Fotheringham, 15 Buena Vista Road, Rockcliffe Park, Ottawa. At the Ottawa Collegiate Institute he was captain of the Cadet Corps, and when the McGill C.O.T.C. was re-organized in the fall of 1914 he entered it as a private. By the succeeding spring he had risen to the rank of company sergeant-major. Not waiting to finish his course in Science, Lieut. Fotheringham joined the 148th Battalion under Lieut.-Col. Magee, and in England was transferred to a reserve unit. In order to get to the front faster, he took a course at the Royal Flying School, and in April, 1917, went to France. There, owing to an accident, he was confined to an hospital for some time, but in June rejoined his squadron.

A letter received from his flight commander says that Lieut. Fotheringham was one of a party of aviators which went out against a large German squadron. From those in other machines it is learned that his machine fell in flames from a height of 10,000 feet, the letter adding that it was almost certain that he had been killed by enemy fire before his machine fell.

Matheson, 2nd Lieut. H. L.—2nd Lieut. Homer Lindsay Matheson, Arts '13, of the 9th East Surrey Regiment, who had been missing since August 16, 1916, was officially reported killed by the War Office in June. He was the son of Rev. John Matheson, Dalhousie Mills, Ont., went overseas with the 5th C.M.R. and won his commission in England. He was killed in an attack on a German trench in front of Guillemont on the Somme front, while acting as Sniping and Intelligence Officer of his battalion.

Murray, Major H. A.—Major Harcourt Amory Murray, Sci. '15, who was reported in August as previously missing, now presumed to have died on October 1, 1916, enlisted while in his fourth year in the Faculty of Science in the 24th Battalion, "Victoria Rifles" under Lieut.-Colonel J. A. Gunn. When the battalion went overseas he held the rank of lieutenant, but in France was promoted first to captain and finally to the rank of acting major. Major Murray's home was in New Glasgow, N.S. He was born at Union Centre, N.S., in 1893, attended the New Glasgow High School, and was taking a course in Mechanical Engineering when he enlisted. Major Murray was a member of the English Rugby team in 1912-13, and a member of the champion Wood Cup Rugby football team in 1913. He was a corporal in the old C.O.T.C., before its re-organization in 1914.

Winter, Capt. F. B., M.C.—Captain Francis Bassell Winter, Sci. '14, of the 26th Battalion, who is presumed to have died on active service, won both the Military Cross and bar on active service, before falling. Born at Georgetown, British Guiana, on June 16, 1892, he was the son of Charles F. Winter, now of St. John, N.B. Capt. Winter resided practically all his life in St. John, and after graduating in Electrical Engineering in 1914 volunteered for service in the 26th New Brunswick battalion. He went overseas in 1915 and served with great distinction until his death, winning the Military Cross at Courcellette, and later receiving a bar to his decoration.

ACCIDENTALLY KILLED.

McLachlin, Lieut. E.—Lieut. Ewen McLachlin, past student, accidentally killed at Shorncliffe on August 19, was a native of Arnprior, Ont., where he was born on February 22, 1887. Educated at Ashbury College, Ottawa, he entered the Faculty of Applied Science at McGill in 1905, and was for two years a student therein. Before the war Lieut. McLachlin was connected with the McLachlin Lumber Co., Arnprior, as a director. He also held a commission as lieutenant in the Governor-General's Foot Guards, Ottawa. In 1915 he went to an aviation school at Long Island, New York, and there qualified as an airman. Early this year he sailed for England, but was rejected for the air service on account of his age. He therefore transferred to the artillery, and qualified for his commission. While awaiting orders at Folkestone, to proceed to France, Lieut. McLachlin was accidentally killed at Shorncliffe, on August 19, while cleaning his revolver. The weapon accidentally discharged, killing him almost instantly.

Perrault, Cadet L. G.—Cadet Lucien Guy Perrault, Comm. '17, of the 79th Canadian Reserve Squadron, Royal Flying Corps, had only been in training for a short period when he was accidentally killed at Camp Borden, Ont., on April 17 last. Lieut. Perrault left his studies a month previously to enter upon training. On the day in question he attempted to pick up a shovel in front of an aeroplane whose propeller was revolving, and in doing so, he stepped too near the propeller and was instantly killed. He was 19 years of age, and the third son of Joseph Perrault, architect, 2100 Park Ave., Montreal. A brother, Lieut. Rene B. Perrault, Sci. '17, is with the 3rd Canadian Pioneers in France.

DROWNED.

Lowe, Sapper E. J.—Sapper Edward Jackson Lowe, Sci. '17, of the Canadian Engineers, was drowned at St. John's, Que., on August 5, just a few days after he had enlisted for overseas service. Sapper Lowe was a student in the Faculty of Applied Science in 1913-16, when he became connected with the office of a landscape architect in Montreal. When he enlisted on July 21 last he was a member of the engineering staff of the Northern Electric Co., Montreal. On Sunday, August 5, another soldier of the Canadian Engineers Training Depot and he went to the river at St. John's to swim. He took cramps, and in spite of every effort on the part of his comrades, was drowned. The body was recovered after three-quarters of an hour, but efforts at resuscitation proved unavailing. He was buried with full military honours at St. John's on August 7. Sapper Lowe was born at Inverness, Que., in 1894. The son of Rev. J. J. Lowe, now of Metcalfe, Ont., and Mrs. Lowe. He attended Ashbury College, Ottawa, where he was prominent in athletics, and in 1913 entered First Year Science at McGill. The following year he was a member of the editorial staff of McGill Daily, and took a keen interest in the affairs of the Literary and Debating Society. He was possessed of a ready and forceful pen, and would undoubtedly have made his mark both as a writer and as an engineer had he been spared.

DIED.

Muir, Lt. A. D.—Lieutenant Alexander Dale Muir, Arts '12, who succumbed to tuberculosis after having been wounded while fighting with the Black Watch, was born at Glasgow, Scotland, on March 10, 1887, and in 1910 entered McGill from the University of Glasgow. He took lectures with Arts '12, during that session, and the following year was graduated. When war broke out he was a graduate student at Harvard University, but immediately volunteered his services and ultimately secured a commission in the 3rd Battalion of the 6th Regiment Black Watch. He lived at Bradwardine, Man., before enlisting, where his father, Rev. George Muir, resides.

MISSING.

Campbell, Lieut. G. St. G.—Lieut. Colin St. George Campbell, Sci. '04, of the Royal Flying Corps, missing since April 6, was general manager of Campbell and Deyell, Limited, Cobalt, Ont., before he enlisted. He was born at Port Arthur, Ont., on December 23, 1879, and entered the Faculty of Applied Science in 1900. He was graduated in Mining in 1904, and gave up a promising career to enlist. He was the ward of D. W. Saunders, Aldershot, Ont.

Derochie, 2nd Lieut., M.C.—2nd Lieut. Matthew Curtis Derochie, Med. '19, of the 27th Squadron, Royal Flying Corps, missing since July 14, was one of the most prominent students in his year when he sailed in the fall of 1916 to join the Royal Flying Corps in England. He was born in Cornwall, Ont., and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis P. Derochie, of that town. He attended Cornwall High School, and in 1914 entered the Faculty of Medicine. There he rapidly became both popular and promising. In his second year he was elected president of the entire year, and as such conducted the Annual Sports Day rush. He also served as an associate editor of "McGill Daily," and proved to be one of the most capable members of the staff. 2nd Lieut. Derochie flew for his wings at Oxford, and six weeks before he was reported missing joined the 26th Squadron in France. Just prior to going over he was offered a position as instructor in an American aviation school, but preferred to go to France.

Page, Flight Lt. J. A.—After ten months service in France with the Royal Naval Air Service, Flight Lieutenant John Albert Page, Sci. '14, of the 10th Naval Squadron, was reported missing on June 22. Flight Lieut. Page was born in Brockville, Ont., July 11, 1893, the elder son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Albert Page, of that town. He attended the Brockville Collegiate Institute, and in 1910 entered Science at McGill. During his university course Flight Lieut. Page was engaged on various engineering—undertakings throughout the country. He spent one summer with a survey party in the country to the east of Hudson's Bay, another engaged on the construction of the power plant at Cedars Rapids, and still another on the Ottawa water works extension plan on the Gatineau River to the north of Ottawa. He was quite prominent in athletics while at McGill, and especially in the activities of the boxing, wrestling and fencing club, of which he was a leading member. In his final year he won the university light-weight boxing championship, and took part in the intercollegiate assault-at-arms at Toronto as representative lightweight boxer from McGill. Flight Lieutenant Page determined to offer himself for service overseas shortly after war broke out. Accordingly he took a course in flying at the Curtiss School of Aviation at Toronto, and on December 2, 1915, went overseas. In England he received further training, and finally was placed at a Royal Naval Air Station. After being stationed at various Naval Air Stations he crossed to France in September, 1916, and became attached to the 10th Naval Air Squadron shortly before being reported missing. Lieut. Page wrote to his parents that his squadron was recognized as one of the best in the Royal Naval Service, and that it held a record for the number of enemy machines brought down.

WOUNDED.

Alford, Lieut. John N.—For the second time since he joined the Canadian forces in France, Lieut. John Newton Alford, Sci. '11, of the Canadian Engineers, was reported wounded on May 22. Originally Lieut. Alford enlisted at Toronto with the Eaton Machine Gun Battery, and subsequently after service in France with this unit he was transferred to the Engineers. In the summer of 1916 he was first reported wounded. Lieut. Alford was graduated in Electrical Engineering in 1911. He is the son of Walter Alford, Belleville, Ont., and was born in that city on March 8, 1886. Lieut. Alford was not seriously wounded in the leg.

Audette, Lieut. J. deG.—Lieut. John de Gaspé Audette, Law '17, of the Canadian Infantry, dangerously wounded at the capture of Hill 70 in August, is a son of Hon. Mr. Justice Audette, 161 Daly Avenue, Ottawa. He enlisted in 1915 as a subaltern in the 163rd Battalion, and was drafted to another unit on the firing line.

Beattie, Gunner J. D. M.—The second McGill man in No. 7 Canadian Siege Battery (McGill), to be a casualty is Gunner John Donald Macfarlane Bennie Beattie, Arts '17, who received his degree in Arts in absentia at the Convocation last May. Gunner Beattie was admitted to North West Hospital early in June suffering from gunshot wounds, not serious. Born in Montreal, May 15, 1896, Gunner Beattie attended Crichton School and Lower Canada College before coming to McGill. Here he rose to the rank of quartermaster-sergeant in the C.O.T.C., a rank which he dropped when he enlisted in Major Tait's Battery at the conclusion of his third year in Arts.

Benett, Second Lieut. C. M.—Second Lieut. Charles Morgan Benett, Sci. '18, of the Royal Horse Artillery, who was wounded in July, enlisted at the completion of his Freshman year as a private in the machine gun section of the First University Company reinforcing the P.P.C.L.I. He served in France for a short time, and then secured a commission in the Royal Artillery. While serving at Saloniki he was taken ill and returned to England, whence upon recovery he went back to the trenches. Latterly Second Lieut. Benett had been serving with a trench mortar battery, and was considering transferring to the Royal Engineers. He is a native of Brantford, Ont., and was educated at the Brantford Collegiate Institute.

Bieler, Lieut. E. S.—Lieut. Etienne S. Bieler, Arts '15, wounded in the fighting late in April, went overseas as a private in the First Universities Company reinforcing the P.P.C.L.I., and upon arrival in England secured a commission in the artillery. He was admitted to No. 14 General Hospital on April 29th, suffering from gunshot wounds in the right leg. In August, 1916, he was injured slightly in the head. Lieut. Bieler secured his degree in Arts before he enlisted, at the same time winning honours and a gold medal in mathematics. He is one of four brothers overseas, and is the son of Prof. Charles Bieler, of the Montreal Presbyterian College. Originally Lieut. Bieler was a member of the McGill C.O.T.C.

Brown, Lieut. A. A.—Lieut. Arthur Alexander Brown, Sci. '16, wounded in August, is known to hosts of McGill men of recent years as "Art" Brown, of the senior football team of 1913, and 1914. An Ottawa boy, he attended the Collegiate Institute in that city and entered McGill in 1912. In 1916, before graduating, he received a commission in the Canadian engineers, and after training at the depot at St. John's, proceeded overseas. After further training in England he was transferred to the infantry, and as such had been serving for some time in France when severely wounded in August.

Buchanan, Lieut. E. B. Q.—Lieut. Erskine B. Q. Buchanan, Arts '18, of the 13th Battalion, wounded at the capture of Hill 70, in August, is a son of A. W. P. Buchanan, K.C., Montreal, and had completed one year in Arts when he secured a commission in the 139th Battalion Irish-Canadian Rangers. When this unit was broken up overseas, Lieut. Buchanan was drafted to the 13th Battalion, Royal Highlanders of Canada, with which he was serving when wounded.

Carruthers, Capt. K. B.—Captain Kenneth B. Carruthers, Sci. '08, of the Canadian Field Artillery, wounded in May, is a graduate of the Royal Military College, Kingston, as well as of McGill. He is serving with a battery of the Second Division with which he went overseas in 1915. Capt. Carruthers entered Science from R.M.C. in 1906, and secured his degree in Mining in 1908. Before enlisting he was superintendent of the Molly Gibson Mine of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, at Trail, B.C. He was born in Kingston, Ont., on June 30, 1885.

Chown, Lieut. H. B.—Lieut. H. Bruce Chown, Arts '14, of the Canadian Field Artillery, wounded in September, is a Winnipeg man who enlisted in the spring of 1916 as a subaltern. He won the Military Cross this summer, and was previously twice recommended for that honour.

Crombie, Lieut. H. A.—Lieut. Hugh Arthur Crombie, Sci. '17, serving with the Canadian Infantry, was reported wounded in the thigh in June. Lieut. Crombie was born in Saginaw, Mich., September 23, 1896, attended Westmount Academy, and came to McGill in 1913. He became a leading member of the track squad, and sat on the Students' Council as president of the Track Club before he enlisted as a lieutenant with the Canadian Engineers. In the fall of 1916 he went overseas and after training at Crowborough, was transferred to the infantry. At the time of being wounded he was serving with a Central Ontario Battalion. At McGill he was taking the Railway Engineering course. He acted as class secretary and class treasurer, played class football and also served as secretary of the Track Club, besides being a member of the team in 1913-14, and 1914-15. His home is in Westmount.

Cushing, Lieut. A. G.—Lieut. Arthur Gibb Cushing, Sci. '12, of the Canadian Artillery, wounded on May 2, is a member of a family, five members of which are on active service, of whom he is the third to become a casualty. The son of Mrs. Charles Cushing, 555 Mount Pleasant Avenue, he took an artillery course at Kingston not long after the outbreak of war, and went overseas as sergeant-major of the 27th Battery. After six months in France, he returned to England to take out a commission, and latterly had been with an Alberta battery. Of his four brothers, Corp. Charles Cushing, Arts '10, of the P.P.C.L.I., was wounded at Courcellette Lieut. Douglass Cushing, Law '10, of the R.F.C., is a prisoner in Germany; 2nd Lieut. R. M. Cushing, is with a British howitzer battery; and 2nd Lt. Geoffrey Cushing, is with the R.F.C.

DeMuth, Captain Otto.—Captain Otto DeMuth, M.C., Med. '15, of the Royal Army Medical Corps, who was wounded for the second time in June, enlisted as a private with No. 8 Canadian General Hospital (McGill), under Colonel H. S. Birkett, C.B., and received his degree at the Khaki Convocation held at McGill in the spring of 1915. When the hospital landed in England, Capt. DeMuth was transferred to the R.A.M.C. with a commission, and trained at Dublin, Ireland. He was then sent to the Mediterranean, being stationed at Malta. Here he contracted fever, and was invalided to England. Upon recovery, Capt. DeMuth became surgeon in a hospital in the south of England, then Medical Officer to a Heavy Artillery brigade in training, and finally Medical Officer to an Anzac Heavy Artillery brigade on the Somme. In September, 1916, while riding a motor cycle through Albert, he was wounded by fragments of a shell and invalided to Canada on a short leave. Last winter he rejoined the R.A.M.C. Capt. DeMuth comes from Grand Forks, B.C. He was a member of the senior football and hockey teams at McGill. He won the Military Cross in June, and shortly afterwards was married.

Duclos, Lieut. V. E.—Lieut. Victor Eugene Duclos, Arts '15, wounded in the leg, not seriously, in the fighting

HONORS APLENTY WON BY MCGILL'S SOLDIERS GALLANTRY AND DEVOTION TO DUTY RECOGNISED

Graduates of All Faculties, and Undergraduates as Well, Receive Rewards for Brave Conduct Overseas - Brigadier-General A. C. Geddes, Formerly Professor of Anatomy, Created a Knight Commander of the Bath.

The brave deeds done by McGill men overseas since the University closed for the summer months have not gone unrewarded. The list of decorations received by our representatives overseas, which is printed below, is perhaps the largest that has yet appeared, and stands for a great many deeds of gallantry and devotion to duty. Especially is this the case with graduates in Medicine, not a few of whom have been decorated, and who have willingly endangered their lives in order to carry on their work of mercy in the most exposed and dangerous positions. Former students of all Faculties are represented in the list, which embraces not only British decorations, but also a number of foreign decorations.

Brigadier-General A. C. Geddes, organizer of the McGill C.O.T.C. Battalion and professor of anatomy, has been created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, while three graduates, Brigadier-General F. S. Meighen, Brigadier-General J. P. Landry, and a particularly gallant officer, Lieutenant-Colonel H. F. McDonald, D.S.O., have been created Commanders of the Order of St. Michael and St. George in recognition of their services overseas.

Not only are graduates in the list, but also undergraduates in large numbers. Three members of the class in Arts who would have been graduated last spring have received the Military Cross, as well as two members of the 1917 class in Science. The list of decorations is as follows:

Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath. — Brigadier-General A. C. Geddes, Teaching Staff.

Commanders of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. — Brigadier-General J. P. Landry, Law '05; Brigadier-General F. S. Meighen, Arts '89; Lieutenant-Colonel H. F. McDonald, Sci. '07.

Distinguished Service Order. — Major E. G. M. Cape, Sci. '08; Major W. R. Critchley, past student; Major J. S. Jenkins, Med. '12; Major K. H. McCrimmon, Arts '13; Major A. L. S. Mills, Law '14; Lieutenant-Colonel S. H. Osler, Sci. '04; Major E. R. Pease, Sci. '08; Major C. G. Porter, Sci. '11; Major G. E. Reid, Arts '15; Major H. P. Stanley, Sci. '14; Major C. T. Trotter, Sci. '09; Lieutenant-Colonel E. J. Williams, Med. '07.

Military Cross. — Capt. J. E. Affleck, Med. '16; Lieut. T. S. Allan, Arts '17; Lieut. H. B. Chown, Arts '14; Lieut. P. E. Corbett, Arts '13; Major J. L. Dashwood, teaching staff; Capt. O. DeMuth, Med. '15; Lieut. L. M. Duval, past student; Lieut. K. S. Drummond, past student; Lieut. D. M. Ewart, Sci. '10; Lieut. E. P. Fetherstonhaugh, Sci. '09; Lieut. F. S. Fowler, Sci. '10; Lieut. G. H. Gilchrist, Sci. '15; Lieut. F. C. Hanington, Sci. '17; Capt. R. H. Hardisty, Med. '03; Lieut. E. R. Hebdon, Sci. '16; Capt. J. B. L. Heney, Sci. '16; Capt. R. W. Kenny, Med. '03; Lieut. L. B. Kingston, Sci. '08; Capt. J. I. Kemp, Sci. '08; Lieut. J. A. L. Laine, Arts '17; Lieut. R. E. Macafee, Sci. '10; Lieut. B. B. MacConkey, Arch. '14; Capt. B. H. Macdonald, Med. '08; Lieut. D. U. McGregor, Med. '20; Lieut. K. R. McKinnon, Sci. '09; Lieut. G. S. McLennan, Arts '17; Capt. P. Molson, Arts '01; Capt. H. R. Mustard, Med. '14; Lieut. M. O'Halloran, Arts '15; Capt. F. J. O'Leary, Sci. '11; Capt. H. B. O'Leary, Sci. '17; Lieut. P. G. Pedley, Med. '16; Lieut. W. W. Raymond, Sci. '12; Capt. S. G. Ross, Med. '13; Lieut. W. C. Ross, Arts '16; Lieut. A. N. Scott, Sci. '12; Lieut. G. M. Taylor, Sci. '15; Capt. W. G. Turner, Med. '00; Lieut. J. A. G. White, Sci. '11; Lieut. J. A. Wood, Sci. '14.

Bar to Military Cross. — Major S. J. Mathewson, Sci. '15; Capt. B. L. Sawers, past student.

Brig.-Gen. Geddes, K.C.B.
The King has been graciously pleased to approve of the honor of a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath.

ed he was employed on the Engineering staff of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Winnipeg, and in the field rapidly won promotion. Last winter he was severely wounded, and afterwards had an arm amputated as the result of an incident involving great gallantry, for which he was awarded the Distinguished Service Order. This was for carrying out a dangerous reconnaissance under heavy shell fire in the course of which he had his arm blown off, but insisted upon reporting the result of his work before allowing the stretcher-bearers to remove him. In July his name was brought to the notice of the Secretary of State for War for valuable services.

Brig.-Gen. Meighen, C.M.G.

Brigadier-General Frank Stephen Meighen, Arts '89, who previous to enlistment held the responsible position of president of the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, and held other important directorates, went overseas originally with the 14th Royal Montreal Regiment, which he commanded at Ypres. For his conduct at this action he was mentioned in despatches. After returning to Canada, he raised the 87th Battalion Grenadier Guards, from among the men of his regiment, the 1st Canadian Grenadier Guards, and commanded the regiment until its arrival in England, when he was promoted to become officer in command of the 10th Infantry Brigade, with the rank of brigadier-general. He is a native of Perth, Ont., and was born there in 1869, afterwards attending the Montreal High School.

Major E. G. M. Cape, D.S.O.

Major E. G. M. Cape, Sci. '08, was a prominent Montreal contractor before he raised No. 3 Canadian Siege Battery in Montreal in the fall of 1915, a unit which has done splendid work in France since its advent there. Major Cape has been in command of the battery since its formation, and has done good work himself, being sent to the base last spring suffering from illness contracted in the field. In January, last he was mentioned in despatches. He returned to Canada on leave in June.

Major W. R. Critchley, D.S.O.

Major Walter Ramsay Critchley, past student, who was awarded companionship in the Distinguished Service Order for his good work at Vimy Ridge, has been with the 10th Canadian Battalion since it landed in France in February, 1915. He has taken part in many engagements, and has received a variety of promotions. Several other members of his family are on active service. Major Critchley is a past student of Macdonald College, and was awarded the D.S.O. for the following reason: "He took charge of the attack on the second objective, and displayed great skill and courage in capturing and consolidating the position, personally dealing with several of the enemy who offered resistance."

Major J. S. Jenkins, D.S.O.

Major John Stephen Jenkins, Med. '12, awarded the Distinguished Service Order, went overseas as Medical Officer of the 24th Battalion, and served with that unit in the field for some time before being recalled to England to assume staff work. Later he returned to France as Assistant Director of Medical Services of a Canadian division. Major Jenkins has been twice mentioned in despatches, and was wounded in April last. He was born at Cardigan, P.E.I., in 1881, attended Loyola College, and entered McGill in 1905.

Major K. H. McCrimmon, D.S.O.

Captain and Acting Major Kenneth Howard McCrimmon, Arts '13, awarded the D.S.O. for the following exploit: "Under heavy fire he superintended the laying out of trenches and organizing of supplies," left Canada with the First Canadian Division, and ultimately became salvage officer of the division. Later he became transferred to the 18th Battalion, and was promoted to the command of a company. He was accidentally wounded soon after being rewarded for his services with the D.S.O., and was in Canada on furlough last summer. He comes from Kincardine, Ont., and attended the University of Toronto before coming to McGill to complete his course.

Major A. L. S. Mills, D.S.O.

Major Arthur Lennox Stanley Mills, Law '14, awarded the D.S.O. for his part in the taking of Vimy Ridge, on April 9, took out a commission in the 5th Royal Highlanders of Canada immediately upon the outbreak of war, and was finally appointed, with a number of other McGill men, to the 24th Battalion, in which he has since served and risen to his present rank. Major Mills is a son of the late Rt. Rev. Lennox Mills, Bishop of Ontario, and was born in Montreal on June 27, 1890. He pursued a brilliant course in the Faculty of Law, and also served and won his big M. as captain of the University tennis team. The official record states that Major Mills was awarded the D.S.O. for the following reason: "At great risk he collected five five men and, demoralizing the enemy, assisted in the capture of 200 prisoners."

Lt.-Col. S. H. Osler, D.S.O.

Lieutenant-Colonel Stratton Harry Osler, Sci. '04, awarded the Distinguished Service Order, was Assistant Director General of Engineer Services at Ottawa before he went overseas. He was born in 1882, was graduated from the Royal Military College, Kingston, in 1903, joined the Royal Engineers as a lieutenant in 1905, was promoted captain in 1911, and major in 1914. At present he is in command of the Canadian Engineers in one of the divisions at the front. He has been twice mentioned in despatches for his good work.

Major E. R. Pease, D.S.O.

Major Edson Raymond Pease, Sci. '08, of the 42nd Battalion Royal Highlanders of Canada, was awarded the D.S.O. for the following reason: "When in command of his company he consolidated the final objective with great skill and maintained the position under most difficult conditions. He has on many previous occasions rendered invaluable service." Major Pease, who is the eldest son of E. L. Pease, Montreal, left Canada as a lieutenant in the 42nd, and in the field won his captaincy and then his majority. He was slightly wounded in June, 1916.

Major C. G. Porter, D.S.O.

Major Cecil George Porter, Sci. '11, awarded the Distinguished Service Order, has risen in rank from private to major since he joined the 23rd Westmount Rifles in the fall of 1914. Born in St. John, N.B., he was employed with a Montreal contracting firm, and had secured the degree of M.Sc. from McGill before he enlisted. When the 23rd Battalion arrived in England, he received a commission, was transferred to the 25th Battalion, and finally to the 26th, with which he has since served. Major Porter has done some particularly gallant work, has been more than once mentioned in despatches, and twice wounded. He was married to Miss Winifred Mathewson, Arts '12, just before he left Canada on overseas service.

Major G. E. Reid, D.S.O.

Few McGill men serving overseas have passed through as varied experiences or gained a more creditable record than Major George Eric Reid, Arts '15, better known to the student body as "Buster," who was awarded the Distinguished Service Order in June for particularly gallant conduct in the fighting in which the Canadians had at that time recently taken part. Major Reid, besides rising in rank from private to major, has since he enlisted been wounded twice and also mentioned three times in despatches, as well as having been once before recommended for the D.S.O.

"Buster" enlisted in the middle of the football season of 1914 with the 23rd Battalion, Westmount Rifles, as private. He was then in Fourth Year Arts, and a member of the scrimmage of the senior football team under coach Frank Shaughnessy. While his unit was quartered in Montreal he managed to secure leave to play with the team, and did a great deal in putting up a hard fight against "Varsity." It was not long before he was advanced in rank to sergeant, and soon he became company sergeant-major. He has been a member of the McGill C.O.T.C. soon after his formation. When the 23rd left for England he was a lieutenant. It was not long before Major Reid was in France attached to the 3rd Ontario Battalion, following the breaking up of the 23rd, and there he rapidly gained a name for courage and efficiency, qualities which he invariably displayed on the football field. He was wounded and invalided to England, only to rejoin his battalion after a short time. Then he was mentioned in despatches twice. The next McGill heard of him he was again wounded, this time severely in the left hand. He then returned to Canada on leave, and visited the University. He had lost the use of his hand, but nevertheless was so anxious to return to France that he persuaded the authorities. For a time he was lost sight of, only to re-appear as a member of the crew of one of the first tanks which the British launched against the Germans in the early days of the Somme offensive. For what part "Buster" has been awarded the D.S.O. is not mentioned, but it is safe to say that it was for gallant work in a hot corner, for "Buster" seems to glory in such pursuits. Major Reid's home is in London, Ont., where George M. Reid has the right to hold his head high with pride as being the father of one of the bravest of the brave. He was born at London on December 1, 1893.

Major Reid was awarded the D.S.O. for the following reason: "He led a company with great skill and energy. He finally led them to the successful assault of the guns, capturing four field guns, one machine gun and over fifty prisoners. Throughout the advance he showed the utmost gallantry and good leadership, and set a splendid example to all."

Major H. P. Stanley, D.S.O.

Major Harold Poole Stanley, Sci. '14, of the 73rd Battalion, Royal Highlanders of Canada, who was awarded the D.S.O. for his work in the capture of Vimy Ridge, on April 9, was born in Charlottetown, P.E.I., on May 13, 1891. He was employed on the construction of the Montreal Aqueduct before he enlisted. On April 9 Major Stanley was wounded and gassed, and in July returned to Montreal on leave. He is the eldest son of Mrs. J. T. Bethune, 4193 Sherbrooke Street W. Major Stanley "led his company with the greatest courage and skill, being the first into the enemy line, and he organized and led the party, which repulsed a counter-attack. Although wounded in two places he continued his work for several hours, displaying a courage and devotion of the highest order."

Major C. T. Trotter, D.S.O.

Major C. T. Trotter, Sci. '09, has won honors aplenty since he went overseas as a lieutenant in the 4th Field Company, Canadian Engineers in April, 1915. He has been promoted to the rank of major, has been twice mentioned in despatches and has taken part in the battles of St. Eloi, Courcellette and Vimy Ridge, through all of which he passed unscathed. Major Trotter, who was awarded companionship in the Distinguished Service Order in June, is a graduate of the Royal Military College as well as of McGill, was born in St. John's, Que., attended the St. John's High School,

Major C. T. Trotter, D.S.O.

Rev. Mr. Williamson's private school in Montreal, and was engineer and architect of the Standard Clay Products Co., Ltd., before he enlisted. He was home on furlough during the summer.

Lt.-Col. E. J. Williams, D.S.O.

Lieutenant-Colonel E. J. Williams, Med. '07, awarded the D.S.O., commanded No. 6 Canadian Cavalry Field Ambulance at Sherbrooke, Que., before he enlisted with the First Canadian Division. He rapidly won promotion with the Overseas forces and ultimately became commander of No. 1 Canadian Stationary Hospital, at Sanoket. He was practicing at Sherbrooke before he enlisted.

Capt. J. E. Affleck, M.C.

Capt. J. E. Affleck, Med. '16, of the C.A.M.C., awarded the Military Cross for crawling along a trench to a severely wounded officer whose life depended upon an immediate operation, was president of the Medical Undergraduates Society before he enlisted. The official report says he "got the wounded man on a blanket. It was a very slow and dangerous task, he being completely exposed to snipers. Capt. Affleck did not hesitate to risk his own life to do all humanly possible for this officer." Capt. Affleck is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Affleck, Glasgow Station, Ont., and is a graduate of the Amnriop High School. Two of his brothers have been killed in action.

Lieut. T. S. Allan, M.C.

Lieut. Thoburn Stephens Allan, Arts '17, who "led his company in a most gallant manner and captured his objective, which he succeeded in consolidating." He set a fine example to his men." was awarded the Military Cross in July. He is the third member of his class to be decorated with the Military Cross. He was born at Nelson, B.C., on April 23, 1896, attended Western Canada College at Regina, Sask., and the Ottawa Collegiate Institute, and in 1913 entered McGill with the class of Arts '17. He played class hockey and football and also junior hockey, was treasurer of the Arts Undergraduate Society in 1914-15, and was also treasurer of the Economics club. At the conclusion of the session of 1915-16 Lieut. Allan returned to his home in Calgary and there joined an infantry battalion in process of formation. When he arrived in England he was posted to the Royal Canadian Regiment reinforcing depot and since the fall of 1916 has been on active service in France with that celebrated unit.

Lieut. H. B. Chown, M.C.

Lieut. Henry Bruce Chown, Arts '14, was awarded the Military Cross recently for sending back to headquarters most accurate information for fifteen hours, displaying coolness, skill and remarkable powers of endurance. He is with a Western Battery of Field Artillery. Lieut. Chown was previously recommended for the M.C. He was a member of the McGill C.O.T.C. and of the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Manitoba, and went overseas with the 37th Battery C. F. A.

Lieut. P. E. Corbett, M.C.

Lieut. Percy Ellwood Corbett, Arts '13, awarded the Military Cross for the following reason: "He was sent out on a daylight patrol and succeeded in bombing and driving in an enemy post. He made a careful examination of the enemy wire and returned with most valuable information." was Rhodes Scholar from McGill in 1915. When the C. O. T. C. was re-organized in 1914, Lieut. Corbett joined it and qualified for a commission. He became attached to the 73rd Battalion Royal Highlanders of Canada when that unit was formed, but when it proceeded overseas, he remained in Montreal before a supernumerary officer. Determined to get to the front, he paid his own passage to England and from there joined the 13th Battalion on the firing line. He was slightly wounded in September, 1916.

Major J. L. Dashwood, M.C.

Major John Lovell Dashwood, assistant in English at Macdonald College previous to enlisting, who was killed in action on April 13, had previously been awarded the Military Cross for displaying "gallant and fearless conduct while in command of a raiding party. The success of the operation was in large measure due to his coolness and initiative." The announcement of the award was not made until June.

Lieut. F. S. Fowler, M.C.

Lieut. Frank Scott Fowler, Sci. '10, awarded the Military Cross for organizing and leading a successful raid "during which several enemy dugouts were bombed and casualties inflicted. Two prisoners were taken. The operation resulted in the securing of most valuable information." is serving with a Winnipeg Infantry battalion. He was born in that city on April 26, 1888, and after graduating in Mining was instrumental in the Shawinigan Water and Power Co.'s works. Later he was a member of Fowler and Young, 36 Alkins Building, Winnipeg.

Capt. Otto DeMuth, M.C.

Captain Otto DeMuth, Med. '15, senior McGill football and hockey player, won the Military Cross in July for the following exhibition of gallantry: "While attending to the wounded under very heavy fire, his initiative and total disregard of danger enabled the evacuation of the wounded to be successfully carried out during a very trying period. No person or danger seemed too great for him to face in the performance of his duties." Capt. DeMuth, who was wounded in June for the second time, enlisted originally as a private in No. 3 Canadian General Hospital (McGill). He rose to the rank of sergeant and when the unit reached England was commended for service in the Royal Army Medical Corps as a lieutenant. He was sent to the Mediterranean, there contracted typhoid and was invalided to England. After doing medical work there, he went to France as M. O. of a brigade of Heavy Artillery and was wounded at Albert, on the Somme, in September, 1916. He was invalided to Canada, but on his return to England again went to the front.

Lieut. K. S. Drummond, M.C.

Lieut. Kevin Stewart Drummond, past student, awarded the Military Cross for his part in the capture of Vimy Ridge, has been with the 24th Battalion since it first was organized in Montreal. He was born in Montreal, on May 21, 1890, but at the time of his enlistment lived in Midland, Ont. In 1908 he entered the Faculty of Applied Science and for three years was a

Lieut. L. M. Duval, M.C.

Lieut. Leo Manners Duval, past student, awarded the Military Cross for distinguished conduct overseas with the Canadian Engineers, was engaged in practice as a civil engineer in the Canadian West when he enlisted as a lieutenant in the 57th Battalion. He went overseas with this unit, in England, and was transferred to the 41st Battalion, and when this Battalion was in the front line, he was sent to the Engineers with which he has since served. Lieut. Duval, who is the son of R. M. Duval, St. John's, Que., attended the High School in that city before he entered upon a course of study in the Faculty of Arts at McGill. After two years in that Faculty he entered Science but dropped out after the session of 1909-10. He was born at Megantic, Que.

Lieut. D. M. Ewart, M.C.

Lieut. Douglas Marsden Ewart, Sci. '10, who enlisted in the Engineers of the Second Canadian Division as a sapper and won his commission in the field, was awarded the Military Cross in June. Lieut. Ewart was born in Ottawa on February 8, 1890, the son of David Ewart, chief consulting engineer of the Department of Public Works. He attended school there, and in 1906 entered the Faculty of Applied Science at McGill. In 1910 he was graduated in Civil Engineering. When he enlisted as a sapper in January, 1915, Lieut. Ewart was resident engineer for the Canadian Pacific Railway at West Toronto, Ont. In June, 1915, he went overseas and in March, 1916, reached the firing line. In England he was promoted to the rank of sergeant-major, and in November, 1916, won his commission. Lieut. Ewart was awarded the M.C. for displaying "great courage and determination in consolidating his position under very heavy fire. He set a fine example to his men."

Lieut. E. P. Fetherstonhaugh, M.C.

Lieut. Edward Phillips Fetherstonhaugh, Sci. '09, who was awarded the Military Cross in May, was professor of Electrical Engineering at the University of Manitoba when he enlisted with the Canadian Engineers as a commissioned officer. In November, 1915, he went to England, saw service with a field company of Engineers attached to the First Canadian Division and subsequently was appointed assistant engineer at divisional headquarters. He organized and commanded the University of Manitoba Contingent of the C. O. T. C. before he enlisted. Lieut. Fetherstonhaugh is a brother of Capt. H. L. Fetherstonhaugh, Sci. '09, who also was awarded the Military Cross at an earlier date.

Lieut. G. H. Gilchrist, M.C.

Lieut. George Hogart Gilchrist, Sci. '15, of the Canadian Engineers, awarded the Military Cross in August for distinguished service in entering enemy mine galleries and capturing dugouts, enlisted before the completion of his course in a machine gun section and served in the trenches with the rank of corporal for a considerable period before receiving a commission in the Engineers. He has done fine work overseas. Lieut. Gilchrist's home is in Ottawa. Lieut. Gilchrist was decorated for the following exploit: "After the enemy's front line trench had been gained he promptly entered the enemy mine galleries and rendered them harmless, afterwards hunting out traps and investigating and repairing enemy dug-outs in the whole captured area with great promptitude and energy."

Lieut. F. C. Hanington, M.C.

Lieut. Francis Carleton Hanington, Sci. '17, of the Canadian Field Artillery, awarded the Military Cross in June, is the son of Major H. C. Hanington, of the Military Hospitals Commission, Ottawa. Born at Moncton, N.B., February 1, 1894, he went to Victoria, B.C., early in life and there attended school. The session of 1913-14 he spent at McGill with First Year Science and when war was declared immediately volunteered and did duty at the Forts at Esquimaux, B.C., with the Canadian Garrison Artillery. A few weeks later he went overseas as a gunner with a Field Artillery Brigade, and in that capacity served for an extended period in France without suffering injury. Finally he was promoted to the commissioned ranks in which he has done gallant service. He was wounded at Vimy Ridge and at the same time mentioned in despatches. Lieut. Hanington, said the official London Gazette "Was preparing a road for an advance when the enemy shell-fired it heavily, the bombardment including gas shells. By his coolness and determination, he pushed the work forward, despite casualties and completed the task."

Capt. R. H. Hardisty, M.C.

Captain Richard Henry Moore Hardisty, Arts '09, Med. '03, awarded the Military Cross, is a nephew of the late Lady Strathcona, and was mentioned in despatches before being decorated. At the outbreak of the war Capt. Hardisty enrolled in the Canadian Army Medical Corps, and went overseas with No. 6 Canadian Field Ambulance. He was demonstrator in Clinical Chemistry and in Clinical Medicine in the Faculty of Medicine before enlisting, and also a member of the Medical staff of the Royal Victoria Hospital.

J. Lothian, 4 Plewlands Terrace, Edinburgh, and was born on March 19, 1885, at Metros, Roxburghshire. After several months' service in the 15th Canadian Division, Lieut. Lothian obtained his commission in the Seaforth.

Macafee, Lieut. R. E.—Lieut. Ralph Evans Macafee, M.C., Sci. '10, of the Canadian Engineers, who was reported wounded for the second time late in June, comes from Millstream, N.B. He was born at New Brunswick, N.B., on April 15, 1887, and spent two years in the Science Faculty at Mount Allison University before entering Third Year Science at McGill in 1908. In 1910 he was graduated in Electrical Engineering. Before he joined the Canadian Engineers Training Depot at Ottawa, Lieut. Macafee was connected with an engineering firm in Lachine, where he remained for a few months previous to being wounded, and in August it was announced that he had been awarded the Military Cross.

McCrimmon, Major K. H.—Captain and Acting Major Kenneth Howard McCrimmon, Arts '13, who was reported accidentally wounded early in June, originally enlisted as Salvage Officer with the First Canadian Division and in such capacity rendered valuable service to the Canadian forces. Later he was transferred to the 18th Battalion, and was mentioned in despatches by General Haig. Major McCrimmon enlisted from the 32nd Bruce Regiment, Canadian militia, in which he held a commission. He was born at Kincardine, Ont., on October 16, 1890, the son of Dr. John McCrimmon, Med. '78, and a brother of Lieut. Murray McCrimmon, Arts '16, Med. '18. After spending two years at the University of Toronto, Major McCrimmon entered the Faculty of Arts in 1911, and was graduated in 1913. He was prominent in student activities at the University, holding, among other things, a post on the editorial staff of McGill Daily. In June he was invalided to Canada on leave.

MacDermot, Lieut. E. C.—Lieut. E. C. MacDermot, Sci. '12, severely wounded in May, went overseas as a sapper in the Canadian Engineers, and after several months' service in the field, secured a commission and was transferred to the Divisional Signal Company. He was born in Jamaica, June 3, 1888, and took his degree in Civil Engineering at McGill in 1912. He is one of several brothers in uniform, one of whom, Corp. T. W. L.

Macdonald, Capt. R. H.—Capt. Ronald Hugh Macdonald, Med. '08, of the Canadian Army Medical Corps, wounded in May, comes from North Bedouk, P. E. I., where he was born on October 27, 1884. He was practicing at Saskatoon, Sask., when he enlisted in a Field Ambulance Unit, with which he has since been connected. Capt. Macdonald was wounded in the leg and spent some time in hospital in London. In July he was awarded the Military Cross.

McGreer, Gunner E. D.—Gunner Edgar D'Arcy McGreer, Arts '18, of the 25th Battery, C.F.A., wounded in July, was in his second year in Arts when he enlisted in the 66th Battery raised in Montreal by Major Brock. His parents reside at 83 Lorne Crescent and three of his brothers, one of whom has been killed, have enlisted. A sister is also overseas, serving as a nurse in No. 3 Canadian General Hospital (McGill) at Boulogne. Gunner McGreer was transferred to the 25th Battery after training in England. He is an old Montreal High School boy and was a member of the editorial staff of McGill Daily before he enlisted.

MacKay, Lieut. Reay.—After several months' service at the front with the 26th New Brunswick battalion, to which he was transferred from the 55th Battalion, Lieut. Reay MacKay, Arts '17, was reported wounded late in May. Lieut. MacKay, who was for three years a student in the Faculty of Arts, left the University at the completion of the session of 1915-16 to join the 55th and subsequently was transferred to the 26th. He took part in the capture of Courcellette with this battalion. Lieut. MacKay attended Rothsay School, Rothsay, N.B., before coming to McGill. He was born in St. John, N.B., on May 14th, 1895, and is the son of W. Malcolm MacKay, Rothsay. He was a member of the class of Arts '16 before joining Arts '17.

A.—Flight Sub-Lieutenant Gerald Atkinson Magor, Arts '17, of the Royal Naval Air Service, who was reported in May wounded and in hospital at Salonika, suffering from shrapnel wounds in the head, joined the Royal Naval Air Service in the fall of 1916, just after the opening of the University for the session 1916-17. He is the son of J. H. Magor, 47 Rosemont avenue, Westmount, and came to McGill from Bishop's College School, Lennoxville. Flight Sub-Lieut. Magor played second team football at McGill and was an officer of his class. He has a brother overseas, also in the R. N. A. S. Flight Sub-Lieut. Magor was born in Montreal on July 11, 1896. In August he returned home on two months' leave.

Manning, Lieut. V. Z.—Lieut. Viril Zenics Manning, Arts '10, of the Canadian Infantry, wounded in August in the fighting about Lens, was vice-principal of the Macdonald School, Vancouver, B.C., before he enlisted as a subaltern in the 121st Overseas Battalion. He was also a qualified Cadet Corps instructor.

Maskrey, Pte. H. T.—Pte. Harold Thomas Maskrey, Agr. '17, of the Canadian Infantry, wounded in August, enlisted in 1915 with the 14th Eastern Townships Overseas Battalion in which he rose to the rank of corporal. He reverted, however, to the rank of private on being drafted to another battalion already on the firing line. Pte. Maskrey's home is in Lennoxville, Que., and before becoming a student at Macdonald College in 1913, he was a pupil of Lennoxville Academy.

Mathewson, Major S. J.—Major Samuel J. Mathewson, M.C., Sci. '15, wounded in the fighting on the Canadian front in May, has been twice mentioned in the casualty lists, having suffered wounds on the Somme in the fall of 1916. He is serving with a Montreal Highland Battalion commanded by Lt.-Colonel Cantlie, in which he enlisted with his two brothers, Capt. Arthur Mathewson, Law '15, and Lieut. Kenneth Mathewson, Arts '17. The latter transferred to the Royal Flying Corps and was killed in action. Major Mathewson, who is a son of S. J. Mathewson, 202 McGill street, was wounded in the shoulder. In May Major Mathewson rejoined his unit.

Montgomery, Lieut. L. C.—For the second time since he transferred from No. 3 Canadian General Hospital (McGill) to a Montreal Highland Battalion, Lieut. Lorne Cuthbert Montgomery, Med. '17, was reported wounded (severely) in May, during the fighting on the Arras front. Lieut. Montgomery's wounds were in the abdomen. A native of New Richmond, Que., Lieut. Montgomery attended St. Andrew's College, Toronto, where he first gained notice as an athlete. At McGill he was a member of the senior football, hockey and basketball teams, and at the same time won honors in his studies. He sat on the Students Council as president of the Hockey Club and was connected with other student activities. After several months' service with No. 3 C. G. H., first as a private and afterwards as a sergeant, he was transferred to the 42nd Battalion as a lieutenant, and has done extremely good and gallant work. He returned to Canada on a few weeks' furlough in June.

Mullen, Gunner H. S.—Gunner Harold S. Mullen, Sci. '18, of the Canadian Siege Battery, reported wounded in August, left the University at the close of his Freshman year to enlist in Major Cape's Siege Battery. He had been for an extended period at the front before suffering wounds. Gunner Mullen's home is in Hudson Heights, Que., and he was a pupil at St. Anselm College before entering McGill. He was most popular with his classmates in his Freshman year.

Murison, Capt. C. A. P.—Captain Charles Alexander Phillips Murison, M.C., Arts '16, of the Royal Field Artillery, wounded on the Macedonian front on June 3, was one of the first McGill men to enlist. A non-commissioned officer in the original McGill Contingent, C. O. T. C., which was commanded by Major C. M. McKernan, he secured a commission as second lieutenant in the R. F. A., and in company with two other McGill men, M. D. McFarlane and J. A. Lynch went overseas and joined the British army shortly after the outbreak of war. Captain Murison was in his second year when he enlisted. He is a son of Capt. W. J. H. Murison, late of the Canadian Army Pay Corps, and now of the Military Hospitals Commission Command, Montreal. A brother is serving on a mine sweeper in the North Sea. Capt. Murison was recommended for the D. S. O. not long after he went to the front with the R. F. A., and in October, 1915, won the Military Cross. He was born at Grenfell, Sask., on October 7, 1894.

O'Leary, Capt. H. B.—Acting Captain Henry Britton O'Leary, M.C., Sci. '17, wounded in April, was serving with a unit of the First Canadian division, to which he was transferred after going overseas with the 54th New Brunswick Battalion. At McGill he was well known as a boxer and football player, and in addition served the student body as president of the McGill Union. His home is in Richbucto, N.B., where he was born on January 12, 1893; the son of Lieut.-Colonel Richard O'Leary. Capt. O'Leary attended Loyola College before coming to McGill. He was previously a member of the McGill team, and enlisted at the close of his second year in Science. He was mentioned in despatches for his good work in the spring fighting, and in July the award to him of the Military Cross was gazetted. He is a nephew of His Lordship the Bishop of Charlottetown.

Pennock, Lieut. W. B.—Lieut. William B. Pennock, Sci. '15, of the Canadian Engineers, wounded early in May, was a member of the second football team of the University before he enlisted and also participated in other student activities, being a member of the Junior Dance Committee. He is an Ottawa boy, born in 1893, and a past student of the Ottawa Collegiate Institute. After securing his degree, Lieut. Pennock held a commission in the Canadian Engineers and ultimately reached France. Some months ago he was mentioned for bravery at the front.

Peterson, Major W. G.—Major William Gordon Peterson, Arts '08, wounded in July, went overseas as junior major of the 73rd Battalion. He served with it in France until it was disbanded early in the present year. Previously Major Peterson held a commission in the Royal Canadian Regiment and was attached to Militia Headquarters at Ottawa. He is a most efficient officer and returned soldiers speak highly of his work as an instructor, as well as of his readiness to share every danger to which the men are exposed. It is stated that on many occasions when one of the 73rd officers in the front line would become a casualty, Major Peterson would take his place and serve in the trenches under an officer who perhaps held only the rank of lieutenant. He is a graduate of Oxford as well as of McGill and a son of Sir William Peterson, K.C.M.G. Latterly he had been attached to the Canadian Headquarters Staff.

Porter, Major Cecil G.—Major Cecil G. Porter, Sci. '11, of the 28th Battalion, C.E.F., was wounded slightly in the fighting in May. After taking post graduate work in Mining, Major Porter enlisted as a lieutenant in the 26th, and has since risen to his present rank. Major Porter has been twice mentioned in despatches and was previously wounded. Just previous to going overseas, Major Porter was married to Miss Winnifred Mathewson, Arts '12. He was awarded the D.S.O. early in the summer.

'18, of the 212th Battery, Royal Garrison Artillery, was admitted in July to No. 2 Red Cross Hospital, Rouen, suffering from wounds received from shell-fire and also from gas poisoning. 2nd Lieut. Reeve enlisted at the close of his Freshman year in the Canadian Overseas Railway Construction Corps as a sapper. Last spring he was recalled from France and granted a commission in the Royal Garrison Artillery and had been in France only a short time when wounded. He is 22 years old and the son of A. Reeve, manager of the T. Eaton Company's Montreal factory. He is a member of the Knights of the Round Table and attended Shortell's Academy before coming to McGill.

Reid, Lieut. J. H.—Lieut. John Herbert Reid, Sci. '16, of the Canadian Infantry, wounded in July, first enlisted in the summer of 1915 with the Third University Company as paymaster. This position he resigned to complete his studies in Electrical Engineering when he volunteered for the service and was accepted by Lieut. Colonel A. A. Magee for the 148th Battalion. After training in England he was transferred to another Canadian battalion on the front. Lieut. Reid was an officer in the C. O. T. C. before enlistment. His home is in Grand Forks, B.C.

Sawers, Captain B. L.—Captain Brian L. Sawers, M.C., Sci. '15, of the Royal Engineers, wounded in July, enlisted on the outbreak of war as a sapper in the Canadian Engineers and rapidly won promotion to the present rank. He was awarded the Military Cross during the winter of 1916-17 for gallantry and distinguished service in the course of mining operations. His home is in Vancouver, B.C., and several of his brothers are on active service. In August he was awarded a bar to his Military Cross.

Shaver, Pte. F. W.—Pte. Frank Wilson Shaver, Arts '19, of the Canadian Infantry, wounded in July, had completed his First Year in the University when he enlisted in the 148th Battalion recruited by Lieut.-Colonel A. A. Magee. He had served in the C. O. T. C. Shaver was in France for seven months before being wounded. His home is in this city and he was a pupil of the Montreal High School before joining the colors. He is 19 years of age.

Shaw, Capt. R. McLeod.—Captain Robert McLeod Shaw, Ced. '08, of the Canadian Army Medical Corps, was reported wounded in August, while serving in the original McGill unit in Arts. He was born in Montreal on September 19, 1893, and is a son of the late Dr. Laphrore Shaw. He was in hospital near London after being wounded.

Smith, Sapper G. G.—Sapper Cecil Gordon Smith, of the Signal Corps, wounded in the head, attended McGill during the session of 1911-12 as a student in Arts. He was born in Montreal on September 19, 1893, and is a son of the late Dr. Laphrore Shaw. He was in hospital near London after being wounded.

Strong, Gunner R. W.—Gunner Randolph William Strong, Sci. '17, reported wounded in May, was the first casualty reported from No. 7 Canadian Siege Battery (McGill), with which he was one of the first to enlist when it was raised by Major W. D. Tait in the spring of 1915. Gunner Strong was wounded in the arm on May 1st, and spent some time in hospital at Manchester, England. Born in Cambria, Que., July 28, 1891, Gunner Strong attended the Lachine Academy and in 1909 entered the Faculty of Applied Science at McGill. In 1913 he returned to the University and had completed his third year in Science when he enlisted. Captain Garnet Strong, of the Canadian Forestry Service, is a brother, the two being sons of Mr. and Mrs. Matthew J. Strong, Cambria, Que.

Stuart-Roussac, Gunner J. A.—Gunner John Augustus Stuart-Roussac, Sci. '19, of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, who was reported wounded in May, left the University towards the close of his Freshman year to join "C" Battery, R.C.H.A., at Kingston. He is the son of B. T. Roussac, Rangoon, Burma, where he was born on September 24, 1897. Before coming to McGill, Gunner Roussac attended Waverley College, Edinburgh, Scotland.

Thom, Lieut. J. B.—Lieut. James Balburt Thom, Sci. '17, of the Canadian Engineers, who was wounded in June, was born in Montreal, on February 23, 1893, the son of the late James Thom, Westmount. Lieut. Thom enlisted with the Engineers in 1916. He had been in France for some time before being wounded.

Underhill, Capt. F. C.—Captain Frederick Clare Underhill, Sci. '11, of the Royal Garrison Artillery, wounded in July, was transferred to the Imperial forces in April last, when he was gazetted second in command of a siege battery. Previously he was with the Canadians and was wounded during the summer of 1916. His home is in Vancouver, B.C.

Velasco, Pte. E. M.—Pte. Edward Velasco, Sci. '19, a young Spaniard serving with the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, was wounded in the arm in the fighting of the early summer. Pte. Velasco enlisted at the close of his Freshman year with the 6th University Company, and went overseas with the second platoon. He was born at Barcelona, Spain, in 1898, and came to McGill from Mount St. Louis Academy, Montreal.

Weldon, Pte. Leslie S.—Pte. Leslie Smiley Weldon, Sci. '16, of the 1st Canadian Pioneer battalion, seriously wounded in May, entered the Faculty of Science in 1912, and was for two sessions a student. He went overseas during the winter, and in the course of time was drafted to the P.P.C.L.I. Pte. Dodd was born in England 21 years ago, and resided in Lachine before enlistment.

Donaldson, Lieut.-Colonel A. S.—Lieutenant-Colonel Anson Scott Donaldson, Med. '01, reported suffering from gas poisoning, in August, is a veteran of two campaigns, besides that in which he is at present engaged as officer commanding No. 3 Canadian Field Ambulance. A native of Brockville, Ont., he enlisted in Lord Strathcona's Horse when the South African contingent was formed. He served until 1902, winning the Queen's medal with five clasps. He then entered the British army and took part in the expedition against the Mad Mullah in Somaliland, winning the Somaliland medal. Later Lieutenant-Colonel Donaldson was employed by the Delagoa Bay Development Co. in Swaziland, and by the Elder-Dempster Line as a surgeon.

When the Great War was declared he was practicing at Calgary, Alta., but immediately offered his services, going overseas as second in command of No. 3 Field Ambulance. He was mentioned in despatches in April, 1916.

Strong, Gunner R. W.—Gunner Randolph William Strong, Sci. '17,

Fleet, Lieut. C. A. R.—Lieut. Charles Andrew Robertson Fleet, Arts '09, Law '11, of the Canadian Field Artillery, gassed in August, has been on active service since the summer of 1915, when he enlisted as a subaltern in the 35th Battery, C.F.A. He is a son of C. J. Fleet, K.C., and was a member of the firm of Fleet, Falconer, Phelan and Bovey before enlisting. He was trained in the McGill C.O.T.C.

WOUNDED AND MISSING.

Taylor, 2nd Lieut. R. H.—Capt. R. H. Taylor, 806 University street, has received official word that his son, Second Lieut. Richard H. Taylor, Arts '18, of the 8th London Territorials, has been wounded and missing since September 20. Second Lieut. Taylor enlisted as a private in the spring of 1915, in the First University Company reinforcing the P.P.C.L.I., and served for eighteen months in the trenches without suffering injury. Two months ago he was recalled to England to receive a commission and, after qualifying, was attached to the 8th London Territorials.

ILL.

Cape, Major E. G. M.—Major E. G. M. Cape, Sci. '98, officer commanding a battery of Canadian Siege Artillery, was reported ill during the fighting in May. A prominent contractor in Montreal, Major Cape joined the McGill C.O.T.C. shortly after the outbreak of war, and afterwards took an artillery course at Kingston. In the battery which he later raised, No. 3 Battery, Canadian Siege Artillery, there are a number of other McGill men, and the unit has been several times mentioned for its good work in the field. In January, 1917, Major Cape was mentioned in despatches, and later he was awarded the D.S.O. Major Cape returned to Canada on furlough in June.

Churchill, Capt. L. P.—Captain Lewis Peers Churchill, Med. '09, of the Canadian Army Medical Corps, admitted to No. 2 General Hospital, Havre, in June, suffering from trench fever, was overseas as Medical Officer of a Nova Scotia Highland Battalion, and crossed to France in February last. He went through the battle for the possession of Vimy Ridge in charge of a dressing station in the front line. Born in Lockport, N.S., July 28, 1884, he is the son of Enos Churchill, of that place. He entered McGill in Arts in 1902, transferred to Medicine in 1903, and secured his degree in 1909.

ADDITIONAL DECORATIONS.

Capt. R. F. Skelton, M.C.

Captain Ralph Skelton, Sci. '14, has been awarded the Military Cross, according to word that has been received by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Skelton, 108 Comedey Street. Capt. Skelton is serving with the Royal Field Artillery, and was decorated for gallantry and devotion to duty at Ypres on July 31-August 1. He is a graduate of the Royal Military College, and is 27 years of age. He was employed by the Imperial Tobacco Company before enlistment.

Capt. E. A. McCusker, M.C.

Lieut. L. B. Kingston, M.C.

Lieut. Laurence Bradley Kingston, Sci. '08, "established communications under heavy fire, and sent back valuable information at Vimy Ridge. He has previously done fine work," being for these services decorated with the Military Cross. Lieut. Kingston is an Ottawa man, and was engineer with Smith, Kerry and Chace, in New Ontario before he enlisted with the 23rd Battery, C.F.A. He was also mentioned in despatches for his good work at Vimy. At the Ottawa Collegiate Institute he was captain of the Cadet Corps. Lieut. Kingston is a son of A. G. Kingston, chief accountant of the Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Lieut. J. A. Lalanne, M.C.

Lieut. James Arthur Lalanne, Arts '17, who was awarded the Military Cross for the following reason: "For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in making a successful daylight reconnaissance at great personal risk under heavy fire at close range from the enemy trenches. He later showed great ability in making a reconnaissance and covering the placing of outposts. He has at all times shown the same qualities of courage and good judgment," left the University at the close of his second year to join the 2nd University Company as a sergeant. He trained at Niagara-on-the-Lake, and in Montreal, and went overseas during the summer of 1915. After serving in France for several months with the P.P.C.L.I., he was promoted to the commissioned ranks, and attached to the 60th Battalion. When the latter unit was disbanded he was transferred to another infantry battalion. Lieut. Lalanne was wounded in 1916, and was at a hospital in the Isle of Wight for some time. His home is in Brownsburg, Que., and he is a graduate of the Lachute Academy. Lieut. Lalanne is the son of the late John Arthur Lalanne, Brownsburg, and is but 20 years of age.

Lieut. R. E. Macafee, M.C.

Lieut. Ralph Evans Macafee, Sci. '10, awarded the Military Cross, has in addition to this honour been twice wounded, and also mentioned in despatches while on active service. Born in Newtown, N.B., in 1887, he spent two years at Mount Allison before entering Third Year Science at McGill in 1908. In 1910 he was graduated in Electrical Engineering, and prior to enlisting was employed with a Hamilton corporation. On two occasions Lieut. Macafee went forward under heavy artillery and sniping fire to tape out a line, which was of the greatest assistance in evacuating wounded, and guiding reinforcements.

Lieut. B. B. McConkey, M.C.

Lieut. Benjamin Bertram McConkey, Arch. '14, awarded the Military Cross for good work with his guns at Vimy Ridge, comes from Guelph, Ont., and went overseas with the Fourth Brigade Ammunition Column. He has been in France for some time. Lieut. McConkey "as forward observing officer rendered most valuable service during the advance. When his lines were out he continued to send back timely information by runner showing initiative and great courage."

Capt. R. H. Macdonald, M.C.

Captain Ronald Hugh Macdonald, Med. '08, won the Military Cross for going out in view of the enemy, who were shelling a disabled aeroplane, and extricating a wounded airman. He volunteered his services early in the war, and was attached immediately to a field ambulance. He was previously mentioned in despatches, and was also wounded in May last. Capt. Macdonald was born in North Bedouque, P.E.I., in 1884, but was practising at Saskatoon, Sask., when he enlisted.

Lieut. D. U. McGregor, M.C.

Lieut. Douglas U. McGregor, Med. '20, of the Royal Flying Corps, awarded the Military Cross, is a McGill undergraduate in the flying service who has done exceptionally good work in recognition of which he was not long ago presented with a special aeroplane of which there were at that time only six in existence, by the French authorities. Enlisting in the course of his Freshman year, Lieut. McGregor was first stationed at Reading, where he did well in his machine gunnery examinations. At Vendome, France, in a large class, he passed with honours, and later took up flying studies at Grantham and in Scotland. He was then sent to France, and at last word had brought down his ninth enemy machine. He has had a number of narrow escapes; on one occasion a shell passed through a wing of his machine, and on another his engine was disabled by shell fire. He is a son of Dr. J. D. McGregor, Waterdown, Ont.

Lieut. K. R. MacKinnon, M.C.

Lieut. Kenneth Royal MacKinnon, Sci. '09, of the Divisional Signal Co., was awarded the Military Cross for the following reason: "Under heavy fire he gallantly led a party of signallers to an objective." Lieut. MacKinnon, whose home is in New Glasgow, N.S., enlisted as a sapper in the Engineers, won his stripes and then his commission. He was employed by Smith, Kerry and Chace, Toronto, before enlistment.

Lieut. Guy S. McLennan, M.C.

Lieut. Guy Stuart McLennan, Arts '17, although twice wounded in the attack on Vimy Ridge, "continued to lead his men, who were inspired by his fine personal example." For this he was awarded the Military Cross. Lieut. McLennan, who was military editor of McGill Daily previous to enlistment, is a son of Duncan McLennan, 101 Crescent street, and qualified for a commission in the Engineers before he joined the 73rd Battalion R.H.C., in which he ultimately became machine gun officer. When wounded he was works officer of the unit. Lieut. McLennan's wounds were not serious, and consisted of bullet wounds in the arm. He has a brother in the Imperial army.

Capt. Percival Molson, M.C.

Captain Percival Molson, Arts '01, one of the original officers of the McGill C.O.T.C., and second in command of the Second University Company reinforcing the P.P.C.L.I., was awarded the Military Cross early in June for distinguished service at the front. In the summer of 1916 Capt. Molson was wounded and returned to Montreal for a short time to recover from his wounds. Upon returning to France he rejoined the P.P.C.L.I. He was killed in action on July 4, 1917. A brother, Capt. Herbert Molson, of the 42nd Battalion, also won the Military Cross, and a third brother, Major Walter Molson, left Canada with the 24th Battalion.

Capt. H. R. Mustard, M.C.

Captain Hugh Roy Mustard, Med. '14, of the Canadian Army Medical Corps, received the Military Cross for his gallantry at Vimy Ridge. Born in 1887 at Stony Mountain, Man., he was practising at Pictoria, B.C., when he enlisted with a Field Ambulance unit from that province. Captain Mustard is the son of John Mustard. He was also mentioned in despatches for his good work at Vimy, and was wounded in October, 1916, returning to duty the following month.

Captain Mustard was decorated "for conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in dressing the wounded of a battery in the open, exposed to shell fire, for two hours. He then continued at an exposed post for three days dressing wounded, and he has on several occasions exhibited great courage and devotion of the same kind."

Lieut. M. O'Halloran, M.C.

Lieut. Melbourne O'Halloran, Arts '15, awarded the Military Cross for gallantry at the taking of Vimy Ridge, enlisted with the Canadian Artillery immediately after receiving his degree in Arts. He trained at Kingston, Ont., and received an appointment to a battery then undergoing formation there. In the fall he went overseas. In the early winter of 1916 Lieut. O'Halloran was slightly wounded. He was born in Cowansville, Que., March 23, 1893, the son of George F. O'Halloran, Arts '83, Law '85, and the grandson of the late Sir Melbourne Tait, Law '62. Lieut. O'Halloran attended Ashbury College, Ottawa, before coming to McGill. Here he was connected with McGill Daily as sporting editor during the term as editor of his firm friend, the late Lieut. Allen Oliver, M.C., and also was a prominent member of the Literary and Debating Society and of the Political Economy Club.

Lieut. O'Halloran won the Cross when acting as F.O.O.: he maintained his line and rendered invaluable services throughout the operations. His initiative and courage under heavy fire contributed much to the successful work accomplished."

Capt. F. J. O'Leary, M.C.

Captain Frederick James O'Leary, Sci. '11, awarded the Military Cross, was engaged in practice as an architect and engineer in Saskatoon, Sask., before he enlisted as a lieutenant in the 53rd Battalion. He has since been promoted to his present rank, and was also previously mentioned in despatches. Capt. O'Leary was born at San Antonio, Tex., September 17, 1887, and attended Loyola College before taking the Civil Engineering course at McGill. For a time he was superintendent of the Standard Construction Co., Saskatoon. Capt. O'Leary was decorated for conspicuous bravery during the capture of Desire Trench in October, 1916.

Capt. Harry O'Leary, M.C.

Captain Harry O'Leary, Sci. '17, who received the Military Cross for gallantry at Vimy Ridge, was born at Richibucto, N.B., on January 12, 1893, the son of Lieut.-Colonel Richard O'Leary. He attended Loyola College and entered McGill in 1911 with the class of Arts '15. After spending three years in Arts he transferred to Science and was a member of Science '17 when he enlisted as a lieutenant in the 55th New Brunswick battalion. He is now officer in charge of trench mortars of the First Canadian Division. At the University Capt. O'Leary was president of the McGill Union, and also a well known boxer and football player. He was mentioned in despatches in April, and was also wounded at the same time.

Captain O'Leary "was in charge of the brigade trench mortars during the attack. He handled his guns with great coolness and determination, setting a fine example under heavy fire."

Lieut. F. G. Pedley, M.C.

Lieutenant Frank Gordon Pedley, Med. '16, of the Royal Army Medical Corps, was awarded the Military Cross in August. According to the official advice, Lieut. Pedley proceeded into a dugout which had been hit by shell fire and saved the lives of many occupants. He afterwards went through a heavy barrage to attend to a badly wounded officer, who was eventually brought back to a dressing station. "On both occasions," states the Gazette report, "he displayed the utmost gallantry and disregard for danger."

Lieut. Pedley, at the time a student in Fourth Year Medicine, enlisted in the spring of 1915 with No. 3 Canadian General Hospital (McGill) under Colonel H. S. Birkett, C.B., and proceeded to France with that unit in the ranks. The hospital did duty at Camiers and at Boulogne, France, and early in 1916 Lieut. Pedley was returned to Canada, at the direction of the War Office, to complete his medical studies. He secured his degree in Medicine at McGill in 1916, and immediately re-enlisted in the Royal Army Medical Corps with the rank of Lieutenant. He is a son of Rev. Dr. Hugh Pedley, Montreal.

Lieut. W. W. Raymond, M.C.

In announcing the award of the Military Cross to Lieut. William Gasset Raymond, Sci. '12, the London Gazette says that "he made a personal and thorough investigation of a town under shell fire. The gallantry and coolness of this officer are beyond all praise." Lieut. Raymond is a St. John, N.B., man, who enlisted at Montreal as a gunner in the 21st Battery during the winter of 1914-15.

Capt. S. G. Ross, M.C.

Capt. Stanley Graham Ross, Arts '10, Med. '13, of the C.A.M.C., awarded the Military Cross for gallantry in the fighting in the neighborhood of Lens, was practising his profession in Durocher Street, Montreal, before he went overseas as an officer in No. 6 Canadian Field Ambulance. He has been serving at the front for an extended period.

Lieut. W. C. Ross, M.C.

Lieut. William Cameron Ross, Arts '15, was awarded the Military Cross for re-organizing his men under heavy fire and leading them forward, "setting a splendid example throughout." This incident occurred in a daring raid on the enemy's trenches in April, resulting in the capture of 18 prisoners and the killing and wounding of many more. Lieut. Ross was slightly wounded, but was able to return to France shortly afterwards. He is the son of Hon. W. H. Ross, Victoria, B.C., and attended the Collegiate School there before coming to McGill. Here, Lieut. Ross was a member of the staff of McGill Daily, played second team football and also was a heavyweight boxer. He was a company sergeant-major in the C.O.T.C. before he enlisted in the 72nd Battalion as a lieutenant.

Lieut. A. N. Scott, M.C.

Lieutenant Allan Nye Scott, Sci. '12, who was awarded the Military Cross in May, has been overseas with the Canadian Engineers for two years, in which period he has seen a great deal of service. After graduation from McGill he was employed as a draughtsman by the Municipal Electric Company, Ottawa. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Scott, 540 Gilmour St., Ottawa.

Lieut. G. M. Taylor, M.C.

"He organized demolition parties with marked ability and despite wounds he received he continued to direct his men," says the London Gazette concerning Lieut. George Melville Taylor, Sci. '15, who was awarded the Military Cross for his work. Lieut. Taylor was dangerously wounded on March 1 by a bullet which entered his chest within an inch of his heart, and passed out of his back. Pneumonia developed. While returning to the dressing station Lieut. Taylor received a second wound, but he made a remarkable recovery at the 2nd General Hospital, Manchester. Lieut. Taylor was employed by the Montreal Terminal Co. after graduation. He is a son of G. W. Taylor, assistant Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, 288 Clewley Ave., Ottawa.

Capt. W. G. Turner, M.C.

Captain William George Turner, Arts '96, Med. '00, awarded the Military Cross, is a brother of General Turner, V.C., and joined No. 3 Canadian General Hospital (McGill) when it was organized under Colonel H. S. Birkett, C.B. At that time he was lecturer in Orthopedic Surgery in the Faculty of Medicine, and a member of the medical staff of the Royal Victoria Hospital. He has been on active service for over two years.

Lt. J. A. G. White, M.C.

Lieutenant James Alex Gordon White, Sci. '11, holds a commission in the Corps of Guides of the Toronto Military District, and with the Expeditionary Force is attached to the 2nd Canadian Divisional Cavalry. He was born in Woodstock, Ont., on Aug. 28, 1887, the son of James White, and was graduated in Mining Engineering in 1911.

Lieut. J. A. Wood, M.C.

Lieut. James Alonzo Wood, Sci. '14, who was awarded the Military Cross during the summer for gallant conduct in the course of a reconnaissance under heavy fire, joined the Canadian Engineers in 1915, and has seen considerable service in France. His home is in Upper Melbourne, Que. Lieut. Wood made a most dangerous reconnaissance under intense fire, and used such judgment that he was able to place his consolidation party with a minimum of casualties. He was wounded.

Major S. J. Mathewson, M.C.

Major Samuel J. Mathewson, Sci. '15, awarded a bar to his Military Cross for directing an advance of two companies with the utmost skill and courage, and clearing a large section of trench by leading a bombing party, went overseas with the 42nd Battalion as a subaltern, and has risen to his present rank by dint of gallant service and application to duty. He has been twice wounded, and won his M.C. at Courcellette. Major Mathewson is a son of S. J. Mathewson, St. Famille street, and is a brother of Capt. J. A. Mathewson, and of the late Lieut. Kenneth Mathewson.

Capt. B. L. Savers, M.C.

Captain Basil Lindsay Savers, past student, serving with the Royal Engineers, was awarded a bar to his Military Cross in August. He volunteered to lead a party for the purpose of destroying two mine shafts, one of which he blew up. Captain Savers is a Vancouver man, and was at McGill with the class of Science '15. He enlisted as a sapper shortly after the declaration of war, and securing a commission in the field, transferred to the Imperial forces. He won his Military Cross for intrepid conduct in mining operations, being attached to one of the Tunnelling Companies of the Engineers. Capt. Savers was decorated with a bar for the following exploit: "He volunteered to lead a party to destroy two enemy mine shafts, one of which he blew up himself. He also assisted to bring in two wounded men, carrying one himself on his back."

Flt. Sub-Lt. P. S. Fisher, D.S.C.

Flight Sub-Lieutenant Philip Sidney Fisher, Arts '16, awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, left the University at the commencement of the session of 1915-16, to take a course in flying at Ithaca, N.Y. In due course, he joined the Royal Naval Air Service overseas, and has been doing most valuable work. He is the son of Mrs. Roswell C. Fisher, 660 Sherbrooke street west, is 21 years of age, and attended the Montreal High School before he entered McGill. While here, Flight Sub-Lieut. Fisher was vice-president of the Literary and Debating Society, and connected with other undergraduate activities. He intended to take a double course in Arts and Science. A brother, Lieut. R. Eric Fisher, is serving overseas with the Canadian Army Service Corps.

Flt.-Lt. C. McNicoll, D.S.C.

Flight Lieut. Charles McNicoll, Sci. '16, of the Royal Naval Air Service, awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, enlisted while he was an undergraduate in Science, going overseas after a course of training in the United States. He is a son of the late David McNicoll, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Pte. D. Dyson.

Pte. David Dyson, of the Canadian Infantry, who received the Military Medal in July for valour, comes from St. George, Ont., and enlisted in the Infantry while a student in the class of Arts '18. He formerly attended Albert College, Belleville, Ont., and contemplated pursuing a course in theology at the Montreal Wesleyan College.

Lieut. E. P. Cloran.

Lieut. Edmund Prescott Cloran, past student, awarded the Croix de Guerre by the French War Department, is the son of Hon. H. J. Cloran, Senator, and was a student in the Faculty of Applied Science from 1909 to 1911. He was severely wounded at the capture of Vimy Ridge, where he served with singular gallantry.

Lieut. W. E. Ord.

Lieut. William E. Ord, Med. '16, of the Royal Army Medical Corps, awarded the Croix de Guerre in recognition of gallant service at the front, was a student in Fourth Year Medicine when he enlisted as a private in No. 3 Canadian General Hospital (McGill). He served in France with Col. Birkett's unit until recalled to resume his studies in Medicine. Lieut. Ord was graduated with the war class of 1916, and immediately joined the R. A. M.C., with which he has since been serving.

Flt. Commr. R. H. Mulock.

Flight Commander Redford H. Mulock, D.S.O., Sci. '09, of the Royal Naval Air Service, created a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, France, enlisted at the outbreak of war with a unit of the Canadian Field Artillery, and after service overseas took out a commission in the Royal Naval Air Service, in which he has since served with distinction. In 1916 he was awarded the D.S.O. for gallantry in air encounters about Dunkirk, and in August last was mentioned in despatches. He is a son of W. R. Mulock, K.C., Winnipeg.

Major R. T. Young.

Major Richard T. Young, Arts '16, who was created a Chevalier of the Order of Leopold, Belgium, in August, enlisted on the outbreak of war in the First Canadian Artillery Brigade, and has risen to his present rank after an extended period of service in the field. He was decorated by Sir Henry Horne, army commander, on August 8. Major Young is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Young, 225 First Avenue, Ottawa. He was once wounded and returned to Canada on leave.

C. F. Kelsch, Comm. '17, of the Royal Flying Corps, has been home from Toronto on leave while recuperating from injuries incurred in an accident. He had sufficiently recovered, however, to permit his return to duty on September 22nd.

HAND-BOOK NO. 28 HAS NEW FEATURES

"Freshies' Bible" Now Can be Obtained from Janitors of Buildings.

The McGill University Hand-Book, commonly known as the "Freshman's Bible," has been issued by the Y. M. C. A. for the session of 1917-18. This booklet, which is the twenty-eighth, is in every way a credit to the work of the editor, K. P. Tsolainos, Arts '18, and presents some novel features. The shape has been altered, and made shorter and broader, this giving the pages a roomier effect. In addition, certain important announcements, as well as the more popular songs, have been printed in black-face type, this innovation causing them to catch the eye more readily. The list of 'phone numbers has also been extended, one much-needed addition being the Daily number. The Hand-Book is on sale at all the college buildings, the price being ten cents, as in other years.

PROMINENT GRAD. AND PROFESSOR DEAD

R. C. Smith, K.C., One of McGill's Most Brilliant Graduates, Dies Recently.

The recent death of Mr. R. C. Smith, K.C., who was one of our most brilliant graduates, as well as a prominent member of the Law Faculty.

Born in Montreal in 1859, Mr. Smith was educated in the Montreal High School, and later in 1881 graduated in Law from McGill. Admitted to the Montreal Bar in 1882, Mr. Smith immediately entered upon a brilliant career in the law profession. In 1899 he was made a K.C., and later in 1909-10 he occupied the enviable position of Batonnier of the Bar.

In addition to a large and varied practice, Mr. Smith was professor of Commercial Law at McGill, and as such had gained a popularity and respect of enviable proportions. Mr. Smith was actively connected with the Wesleyan Theological College, being a governor of that institution. Also as a life governor of the Montreal General Hospital he was successful in promoting several enterprises.

OLD ARTS BUILDING QUITE REJUVENATED

Repairs Executed During Holi- days are Hailed With Relief by Students.

Students of the Faculty of Arts who return to their studies this week will scarcely be able to recognize the Arts Building, so long the butt of facetious remarks on their part. Extensive repairs have taken place during the past summer, notably in the roofing, which formerly was quite inadequate to the task of keeping the moisture out. The ceiling of the Mathematics room has been patched up with some care, and Room 113, which last year proved uninhabitable for a great part of the spring, has also undergone a much-needed overhauling.

In addition to these repairs, much has been done towards brightening up the appearance of the building; window boxes filled with choice flowers now line some of the front windows, giving the corridors quite a festive appearance. The skillful hand of Art Stagg, the indefatigable guardian of the Arts Building may be traced here. After all, however, there is one innovation which stands out above all the others, one which has been looked forward to for long years. Most of the students of the senior years, when informed of it, refused to believe any evidence, but that of their own eyes, but even they were compelled to join the admiring throng when they beheld adorning the end of the hall underneath the staircase, a brand new drinking fountain! To one who was compelled in past years to seek his liquid refreshment through the employment of a plebeian enamelled cup, the installation of this thoroughly modern porcelain fountain is indeed welcome.

MCGILL'S NEW DEPT.

As McGill opens for the session of 1917-18 to-day, it does so with a new department of pharmacy under its control. The inauguration of this department is a consequence of the absorption of the Montreal College of Pharmacy by McGill. From the 1st of October of this year Pharmacy will constitute a new department of the Faculty of Medicine.

For the purpose of imparting instruction in this new department McGill has acquired the building owned by the Montreal College of Pharmacy, which is situated at the corner of Mance and Ontario Streets. Lectures will now be given in the day time rather than in the evening, as by the former arrangement.

The incorporation of the College of Pharmacy in McGill will benefit the students in Pharmacy to a marked degree, as they will now be privileged to make use of the well equipped laboratories, and excellently stocked libraries of McGill.

Professor Alex. B. J. Moore, dean of the old college, will act as head of the new department, which will be similarly conducted to the Dental Department. No other new professors will be appointed, but other lecturers of McGill will have a part in the instruction of the students.

GRADUATE APPOINTED.

Mr. Michael P. Fennell, a graduate of McGill, has recently been appointed secretary-treasurer of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners. The new secretary-treasurer has had a lengthy and varied experience with the numerous details of harbour administration, and he is enthusiastically welcomed by his many acquaintances among the commissioners as he enters upon his new duties. Since the commencement of the war, Mr. Fennell has been actively engaged in war work, being honorary secretary of the British Sailors' Relief Fund. Honorary Provincial Naval Recruiting Secretary during the recent naval recruiting whirlwind campaign. Also Mr. Fennell is vice-president of the Navy League of Canada.

AGED GRAD. DEAD.

Dr. H. W. Wood, whose death at St. John's, Que., occurred on Sept. 27th, was the son of the late Hon. Thomas Wood, a member of the first legislative council after Confederation. He was born at Dunham, Que., in 1839, and took his B.A. degree at Vermont University, and his M.D. degree at McGill. He practiced medicine at St. John's and Knowlton, but had retired for a number of years past. Dr.

FATE OF MCGILL DOGS.

It seems that the Fates have decreed that every year one of the dogs associated with McGill life should be killed by an auto.
Last year it was Nigger, the pet and mascot of the University Co. who met death on Milton street, corner Durocher.
This year one of Nellie's sons has been taken from us. Nellie is the watch dog at the Union.
Last Monday she was taking an airing in front of the Union, when her six month old pup ran out to the road in front of an auto coming west along Sherbrooke St. The dog was struck and instantly killed.
Since her son's burial Nellie's spirits have been very low, although Culyer has been doing all in his power to make her happy.

Wood had been ill ever since the death of his wife some year and a half ago, and his advanced age left little hope of his recovery. He leaves three sons and a daughter, Arthur B. Wood, actuary of the Sun Life; P. S. Wood, manager of the Bank of Commerce in Vancouver; H. W. Wood, electrical engineer with the Canadian Crocker Wheel Co., and Mrs. Robin Simpson, of St. John's.

His Work for Agriculture.

After his princely donations to McGill, Sir William turned to what afterwards became his life-work—the advancement of useful education for rural life, the training of the agricultural population to get the most out of life. This has not inaptly been termed the Macdonald Movement. Macdonald College at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, with all the smaller educational institutions throughout the country which owe their establishment to Sir William Macdonald, grew out of a happy partnership, as it were, formed between Sir William and his right-hand man in agricultural education, Dr. James W. Robertson, C.M.G. For years the ideas of these two men on the subject of education for the rural classes had run in parallel. When they became more intimately connected with one another, Sir William was ready to work in harmony with Dr. Robertson and back him with funds.

In 1899 Dr. Robertson wished to learn whether the country was ripe for the acceptance of the theory that it was worth while for a farmer to use the best seed, and whether the interest of children in agriculture could be stimulated. He took from his private purse the sum of $100 and offered it in prizes to Canadian boys and girls who would send him the largest heads from the most vigorous plants of wheat and oats taken from their fathers' farms. The response was remarkable. The letters which Dr. Robertson received from the farmers and their boys and girls were so suggestive and encouraging that the following winter he said, in substance, to Sir William:

"Here is a great chance to do some educational work in progressive agriculture; to do something interesting, something attractive, something definite, something beneficial to the whole community, something easy, and yet with plenty of difficulties. Farmers and their families may fail to appreciate the educational advantages of a plan or scheme set out in a written statement, but here is something which would be so upheld and instructive to boys and girls that they would go on with it, and the habits of observation and thought and study would go on with them. I would like you to give me $10,000 for prizes to set and keep this thing going for three years."

Sir William gave the money with a right good will. For the main competition the competitors were required to pick each year by hand the largest heads from the most vigorous and productive plants in sufficient quantity to obtain seed from these heads to sow a quarter of an acre the following year. The careful records which were kept of the number of grains a hundred heads, and also of the weight, showed that in the three years the percentage of increase on the average for the Dominion for spring wheat was 18 per cent in the number of grains and 28 per cent in the weight, while in the oats the figures were 19 and 27 respectively. These were the results from several hundred seed grain plots operated by boys and girls under eighteen years of age.

As may be imagined, the children were not the only ones who gained from this practical demonstration. Their parents and neighbors learned the lesson also. These contests gave birth to the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, organized for the purpose of improving the crops of Canada.

Manual Training.

Manual training, the vehicle by which agriculture and education were to be brought together, was the next step. Arguing that an example provided in a town is the most effective method of stimulating the officials of rural schools, Sir William, upon the advice of Dr. Robertson, founded throughout Canada manual training centres at twenty-one places. These were attended by 7,000 children and cost $3,600 a month for teachers. At the end of three years the local authorities were free to continue the schools or not, as they chose. The leaves performed its task. In every case the school was taken over and others added. In Nova Scotia more than a score of school centres of the Macdonald type have been built and are conducted by means of local funds. In Ontario the three Macdonald centres have grown to more than two-score.

The next step was the introduction into the rural schools of manual training, modified for the performance of its new duty. In order to make manual training effective in the country, and of such a nature as to accomplish the desired results, it was essential that it have certain characteristics. It was desirable that nature study, elementary biology, and elementary agriculture should become a part of the curriculum. The two leavers now took two steps. They introduced the leaves of school gardens and the consolidation of rural schools. School gardens were attached to each of five schools in each of five provinces. A trained instructor was put in charge of each group of five schools, devoting one day a week to each school in his circuit, and giving instruction to the teachers as well as the children. The gardens have been a marked success, not only educationally as manual training, but agriculturally. Most useful lessons were learned of the advantages of using selected seed, of the methods of protecting crops from insects and fungus diseases, and of the rotation of crops.

Sir William founded four consolidated schools, one in each of the provinces of Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. The school work was graded, provision was made for classes in manual training, household science, and nature study based on work in school gardens, and waggons were provided for the transportation of children. The cost of the schools for the three years was $180,000. This leaven also accomplished its mission.

These educational reforms created a demand for teachers trained in nature study, agriculture, manual training, and household science. In order to meet this demand, Sir William provided at the Ontario Agricultural College, at Guelph, two large buildings for the residence and training of teachers. This school also trained for the business of home-making in the country, the college having already provided for agricultural education.

Macdonald College.

The crown of all is Macdonald College, at Ste. Anne de Bellevue. The province of Quebec, unlike several of the other provinces, has no agricultural college supported by public funds. Sir William supplied the deficiency with an institution which rounds out the plan of the Macdonald Movement. Intended for training in agriculture, home-making, and teaching, it is probably the best equipped and most advanced institution of its kind in the world. It stands for the advancement of education, the dissemination of research work and the needs of the population in rural districts. In 1906 Macdonald College was handed over to the Board of Governors of McGill, with an endowment of over $2,000,000.

Sir William was a director of and a large shareholder in the Bank of Montreal and was connected with various other institutions.

Many stories are told of the late Chancellor's characteristic modesty, and of his keen business instinct and sympathy with all public matters deserving of support. In his living he was strictly plain, occupying a house which was furnished in the simplest old-fashioned way, in which for many years his sister was his sole companion. He gave the strictest attention to his business, and it is said that when it was found that operatives in his factory were in the habit of throwing tobacco from the windows to confederates below, he had screens placed on the windows.

"For many years, while worth $10,000,000, and doing a business that yielded a net profit of $750,000 per annum," said a writer in the Montreal Star, "he occupied as his private office a little bedroom of the old residence, 94 Notre Dame Street West. This office, about 12 x 12, contained not more office furniture than could be bought for $50. His private desk was a deal table worth about $6. The old wall paper remained on the wall, and the full mark of a soiled workman's hand was there for years undisturbed. He simply would not renovate or invest in new furniture."

"In endorsing cheques he had the peculiar habit of first folding the cheque in three equal parts and then writing his name on the crease. This habit as so well-known to bank tellers that a cheque without the crease would probably have gone back under suspicion of being a forgery."

"Sir William was a great believer in efficiency as he knew it. In his benefactions for buildings he always saw to it that the engines and boilers and all other equipment was the very best, regardless of cost."

"Five years ago, although still worth millions he was so disappointed with the enormous cost of the Macdonald College that he remarked to the writer, 'I am used up in body, mind and estate.' The college was to have cost $750,000, and instead of that it ran into $4,600,000."

"Sir William was laconic in speech. 'We will wait until the ashes cool' was his reply to a newspaper man's query as to what he intended to do about replacing the splendid McGill building destroyed by fire at McGill a few years ago. 'Get a copy of the last annual report—you will find it more about Macdonald College than I am able to tell you,' was his answer to a prominent Toronto journalist who went to see him with the expectation of getting a long interview about the great institution at Ste. Anne de Bellevue. These brief, stern remarks were characteristic of Sir William."

Business Worth Millions.

"If in business he had very few confidants, David Stewart, his financial secretary, knew his affairs down to the smallest detail. When Mr. Stewart's health compelled his retiring four years ago, he seemed to lose interest in business affairs. In 1904 he was offered $6,500,000 for his tobacco business. At first he entertained the offer, but as it afterwards transpired it was only to find out who the real principals were, and the moment he suspected the American Tobacco Company, he closed down on the negotiations, and always spoke reprovingly of one of his most intimate friends, through whom the negotiations were brought to him."

"He had a secret formula for sweetening tobacco, and zealously guarded the secret known only to himself and Mr. Stewart up to the time of the latter's death. His tobacco factories in the east end of the city on Ontario street, have wire guards covering the windows. Operatives were found to be throwing tobacco out of the windows to confederate friends, and he immediately ordered the screens on every opening."

"Sir William was eminently practical down to the smallest detail and there was scarcely a man or woman living who could work on his feelings against his judgment. He set up a nephew in the farming business in the Maritime Provinces, paid for his farm and stocked it with cattle, implements and seed. When his nephew came to him one fall asking for money to buy hay for the winter he gave him a silent stare for two minutes, then in his deliberate, emphatic way said SELL — THE — FARM. That was final, there was no appeal from the verdict."

Sir William was born a Roman Catholic, but before he was twenty years old, he withdrew from all forms of sectarianism, and although he was a strong believer in religion, as he saw it, he had very little sympathy for any particular creed. His funeral was in keeping with the simplicity which has marked his life. There was no display about the event; a number of friends and representatives of the University, and other institutions gathered in the millionaire's residence, while Sir William Peterson delivered a eulogy with a restrained but moving eloquence.

"Many of those present will share my doubt as to whether our departed friend would have cared to have anyone stand forward here to-day," said the Principal, "and use vain words about him now that he is no more. But a request has been made to me which I cannot disregard. For the long period of 21 years I have been his nearest neighbor, and he was chancellor of the university through whose grounds we are about to bear his mortal remains—the university for which he did so much, and in which his memory will never die. That is why I have consented to break the reverent silence which I know he would have considered otherwise appropriate to these last sad rites."

"Anything that savors of eulogy would certainly have been distasteful to him. You know how modest and retiring he was, with a kind of shyness about him that led him almost to shrink from public notice. All that was, in most of the relations of life, the true indication of a genuine humility. And yet he had a sort of pride about him, too. Solitude had made him self-reliant; I doubt if there ever was a man who was less dependent upon others. His philosophy of life rendered him absolutely detached, independent and self-contained. But with all his aloofness and reserve, there was always coupled a certain graciousness and gentility. His old-fashioned courtesy was largely the fruit of that native consideration for others which was one of his marked characteristics; but he owed it also, I think, in large measure, to his birth and breeding. He was a man of old descent and high lineage. And though there was very little romance or sentiment in his composition, there were times when he could easily be made to remember that he was the surviving representative of the chieftains of a gallant Scottish clan which formed part of the 'small devoted band' that made a last heroic effort by the shores of dark Loch Shiel in defence of Charles Stuart. And there at Glenaladale and Glenfinnan what might have been his ancestral possessions remain to this day."

A Self-Made Man.

When death occurs at such a ripe old age, and after so much good work well done, there is no call for tears or sorrow and mourning. The occasion is rather one which will prompt the members of our Montreal community, while marking the flight of time and its significance for each and all of us, to ponder for a little the lessons of the life which has now been closed in death. To most of you our late friend was known mainly, I take it, as a successful man of business. He belonged to the race of merchant princes. He was the architect of his own fortunes, and the capacity he displayed in building up and organizing a great business must have been little short of genius. And when success had fully crowned his arduous efforts, he settled down to use the wealth that came to him for the benefit of his fellow men. To be of service to others, on lines of his own choosing, was with him a passion. It inspired all his solitary thinking. All his careful planning and farsighted calculations. Long ago he took a vow that he would do things by which his fellow citizens would care to remember him; and to-day he is remembered not only in Montreal, but also in the Province of Quebec, and, indeed, throughout our wide Dominion. For the fulfillment of this view is seen to-day in Macdonald College, in the spacious site of Macdonald Park, which he donated to McGill University, and in other most munificent gifts too numerous to mention. There was something that amounted almost to a sort of religious fervor in the way he went about his great benefactions.

"I remember being struck to find how carefully he had marked—as was his habit in almost everything he read—certain words of Bishop Lightfoot's as quoted in a copy he once lent me of the Handbook of Girard College. 'The holy season extends all the year round, the temple confined only by the limits of the habitable world, a priesthood co-extensive with the human race.' Those words he must have taken as the confession of his faith; he certainly believed that the best way of glorifying God was to do one's utmost for one's fellow men."

"Though his range was naturally somewhat limited, he was sincerely fond of good poetry, and in his younger days he had learned many things by heart. Finding him lately in great weakness—though his mind was evidently as clear as it has always been throughout his long illness—I reminded him that perhaps he could derive some comfort by repeating to himself Pope's Universal Prayer, which I knew he could by heart; and it was, strongly even in his weakness, at once and without a moment's pause, take the well-known invocation:—

'Father of all in every age
In every clime adored.'

There has always been some speculation as to the exact form and degree of his religious faith. It is true that as a result of his 'obstinate questioning' he had parted with many of the conventional beliefs of orthodox Christianity. But speaking for myself, I cherish the conviction that when the record is made up it will be found that the name of William C. Macdonald has not on that account been blotted from the Book of Life."

The chief mourners were Messrs. W. E. Walsh and J. P. Carwell, who were followed by the three executors—Messrs. Walter M. and T. Howard Stewart, and Walter Vaughan. Among others in the cortege were:—
Lord Shaughnessy, Sir Vincent Meredith, Sir Herbert Holt, Sir William Peterson, Mr. C. R. Hosmer, Principal Harrison of Macdonald College; Dr. Parmelee, Provincial Educational Secretary; Rev. Dr. Love, Quebec; Mr. A. E. Holt, Mr. F. J. Cockburn, Mr. Sheldon Stephens, Mr. Smeaton White, Mr. J. O. Bosanquet, Mr. G. C. Dunlop, Mr. Justice Archibald, Mr. G. Donaldson, Mr. J. R. Hutcheson, Professor Barnes, Mr. R. B. Angus, Dr. Molson, Mr. S. W. Wells, Controller Ross, Mr. D. C. Patterson, Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. P. R. Walters, Dr. Evans, Professor Laird and Professor Murray, Macdonald College; Mr. E. F. Ward, Mr. W. C. Ross, Mr. Huntly Drummond, Mr. William McMaister, Mr. F. Robertson, Mr. W. R. Miller, Mr. J. V. Ross, Mr. W. M. Birks, Professor McLeod, Rev. Dr. Rexford, Dr. F. J. Shepherd, Principal Dixon, Mr. G. E. Drummond, Mr. J. Gould, F. B. Common, representing the Students' Society; H. R. Morgan, representing the Students' Union, and others.

Sir William's Bequests.

Following Sir William's address the remains were removed to the hearse, behind which followed several hundred admirers of the deceased. As the cortege entered the University grounds at the Sherbrooke street entrance, the members of the Siege Artillery draft, McGill University, were found to be drawn up at attention on either side of the avenue. It then proceeded to Mount Royal Cemetery, where the remains were cremated.

Floral tokens included tribute from McGill University, the Students' Society, the Montreal General Hospital, the Maternity Hospital, Sir William and Lady Peterson, J. C. Holden, Dr. and Mrs. J. Stirling and others.

Under the will of the late Sir William, which was made in notarial form before Mr. D. M. Rowat, on the 25th August, 1914, the following bequests were made to public institutions:

The Royal Institution for the Advancement of Learning (McGill University) for Macdonald College	$1,000,000
The Faculty of Medicine	500,000
McGill Conservatorium of Music	300,000
Endowment of a Travelling Scholarship in the Faculty of Law	20,000
Montreal General Hospital	500,000
Montreal Maternity Hospital	100,000
The Crematorium	100,000

Subject to the above bequests and to provisions for the office staff, domestics and others, the deceased bequeathed the remainder of his estate to Mr. Thomas Howard Stewart and

Mr. Walter M. Stewart, who, with their father, Mr. David Stewart, were associated with him in the conduct of his business as a tobacco manufacturer.

In addition private bequests were made to Sir William Peterson and Walter Vaughan, M.A., both to the extent of $25,000.

Board of Governors.

At a meeting of the Board of Governors the following resolution was passed:

"In recording the death of Sir William C. Macdonald, Chancellor of the University, which took place on Saturday, June 9th, the board resolves to enter in its minutes an expression of deep thankfulness for all he did to promote the development of the university. Without Sir William Macdonald McGill would not have been what it is to-day. Joining the board in May, 1883, his tenure of office as governor was marked by an almost continuous series of benefactions which enabled the university, especially in the practical departments of its work, to keep well abreast of leading institutions elsewhere. To him is due the high place which the Faculty of Applied Science won for itself, not long after its organization under the late Dean Bovey, among the schools of engineering on the American Continent; for it was he who provided it with both buildings and endowment. Without his generous help the reorganization of the Faculty of Law would have been difficult, if not impossible. And the gift of the Students' Union, as well as the wise and far-sighted purchase of the site for student residences on Pine Avenue, will remind all the friends of the university that in cherishing the interests of academic training, he was not forgetful of the social needs of the student body."

"But Sir William Macdonald's greatest benefaction was undoubtedly the erection, equipment and endowment of Macdonald College. The provision by which in his will he has added another million dollars to the endowment fund of the college is most gratefully acknowledged, as also are his generous bequests to the Faculty of Medicine, the Conservatorium of Music and the Faculty of Law. By these and other great benefactions the memory of the late Chancellor will continue to live."

"His death, though it came at the end of a long life and after a protracted illness, has impressed on the members of the board a sense of personal loss. As a colleague, the late Sir William Macdonald was ever helpful, especially in times of difficulty and stress. His devotion to the interests of McGill was one of the most marked features of his life and conversation. Now that he is gone, his colleagues unite in the sincere expression of regret that they can no longer rely on his wise counsel, his great business experience and his generous co-operation. He enriched the university while alive, but it is all the poorer for his death."—H. R. MORRIS, B.A.

BISHOP'S MAN REWARDED.

Among Canadians decorated for valor and distinguished service, names of whom appear in a late list, is Captain John Christie Stewart, for some years a resident of Sherbrooke, and when war broke out, occupying the post of bursar at Bishop's College, Lennoxville. He went overseas as lieutenant in THAO SHRD—W.L. regiment, receiving his captaincy on the field, and has now been awarded the Military Cross.
